Mangajin is a made-up word combining manga ("comics/cartoons") and jin ("person/people"). It sounds almost like the English word "magazine" as rendered in Japanese—magajin. All of the Japanese manga in Mangajin were created in Japan, by Japanese cartoonists, for Japanese readers.

Editor's Note

I'd like to reassure any readers who might be concerned about the fact that the monthly designations of Mangajin bear only an approximate correlation to the calendar months of the year. For example, this issue bears the designation "November," but it won't reach most of you until around the end of November. We like to think of this as a way of extending the joy of magazine readership throughout the month. You probably got the November issues of your ordinary magazines at the beginning of November; or in some cases the publisher was in such a rush that you actually received your November issue while it was still October. Whatever the case, by mid-November you had probably gleaned all the information you wanted from those publications and they lay scattered like dead leaves on your coffee table or desk. A sense of boredom was inescapable as you thumbed through those printed pages whose familiarity had begun to breed a kind of intellectual contempt. Then, just as the feelings of gloom were intensifying, what should arrive but the latest issue of Mangajin!

Another side to this story is the fact that it takes us five weeks to put together an issue of Mangajin. We get out ten issues a year, and these are given monthly designations strictly for the convenience of the people at the post office whose concern with such matters seems, quite frankly, excessive. If you read the fine print at the bottom of the column on the left, you will see that Mangajin is published monthly, except January and July. Well, that's one way of looking at it. Those of us here at Mangajin simply refer to the issues by number, and we would encourage our readers to do the same. Subscribers may rest assured that they will receive a full ten issues, spaced rather evenly through the year.

That being said, I hope you all enjoy No. 31.

Japan And The Art Of Landing Feet First.

The Daruma doll is a Japanese good luck symbol, but is regarded to always land feet first. To make a wish, you paint in one of the eyes. When the wish comes true you gratefully paint in the other eye. This is the non-business side of Japan you need to know in order to understand its business side. All the books you need to fully know the real Japan are now at KINOKUNIYA (Kinokuniya Inc.)—in both English and Japanese.

What about Doraemon?

With Doraemon's weekly anime TV show consistently rated in the top five, more than a score of videos, dozens of manga, toys, games, teaching aids, and the ubiquitous pencils, cassette jackets, clothing, candy, etc.—why is it we never a word about our favorite neko-robot in print? And yes, we've read the paragraph in Manga! Manga!, but we want more, more, more!

UNSIGNED
Seattle, WA

We're trying, but the very fact that Doraemon is so popular seems to make his creators reluctant to let him roam the pages of other publications.

TV sociology

In MANGAJIN No. 29 I was shocked when I read Garcia-kun and the interview with the artist, Takeuchi Akira. Takeuchi has never met, read about, or engaged in any kind of research on his subjects. I was flabbergasted at Takeuchi's reply as to where he got his information: "TV!" This is typical of how our societies are being poisoned by people forming their ideologies from television programming.

I applaud Mangajin for its neutrality on touchy issues and for its format which encourages readers to express their views.

DAN BOLINGER
La Habra, CA

(Note: Garcia-kun is a popular manga series about a foreign laborer in Japan.) As Takeuchi mentioned in the interview, his goal is simply to entertain. In a sense, the fact that he draws on television for his information about for- ign laborers makes his material ideal for Mangajin—it provides a crystallization of popular perceptions about foreign laborers like Garcia-kun. As reader Bolinger points out, we simply tell it like it is.

Baseball update

In the Basic Japanese lesson of issue No. 29, one of the examples is Lotte no Hoshi. The commentary explains that "Lotte refers to Lotte Orions, a Japanese professional baseball team." That was probably true when the manga was written, but no more. A couple of years ago Lotte built a new stadium in Chiba and changed their name to the Chiba-Lotte Marines. "Marine" in the sense of the sea and the natural surroundings of Chiba, not in the sense of John Wayne storming the beach; the team's new pink and turquoise uniforms preclude such a macho image. Actually, the words pink and turquoise don't do justice to the real colors; salmon and teal come closer, but it's something you really have to see.

Since the corporate sponsors of a Japanese pro baseball team view the teams as image-enhancing PR devices, the sponsors frequently remake their team's image, in the same way they remake advertising themes. If not a new team name, then a redesigned uniform; at least one of the twelve pro teams does some kind of makeover almost every year. A few stay with classic designs based on American teams; for instance, the Hiroshima Carp have for decades used uniforms that bear an uncanny resemblance to those of the Cincinnati Reds. But as in most matters of Japanese popular culture, expect even more team makeovers as pro baseball modernizes its image to compete with the latest phenomenon in Japanese pro sports—the explosive popularity of J-League professional soccer.

Tossing and turning

An American attorney who speaks Japanese with near-native fluency and his Japanese wife recounted the following anecdote to me:

"One weekday evening around 2:00 AM, my wife woke me up to ask that I help her go to the bathroom. Being eight months pregnant, she needed help getting in and out of bed and wanted me to turn on the light in the hallway connecting our bedroom to the bathroom. After dutifully helping her, I tried to get back to sleep but ended up tossing and turning for the rest of the night.

The next evening, I was hosting dinner at a New York restaurant for a group of Japanese business clients when one of them turned to me and said, "Smith-san, kyō wa zuibun tsukareta kao o shitemasu ne." ("Mr. Smith, you appear so tired today.") Wanting to explain my sleeplessness the previous evening, I answered, "Ee, yube kanai ni okasaremashite . . ." Dead silence overtook the group, with several of my guests looking uncomfortably at each other. They quickly moved on to another subject.

It was only after I returned home that evening and recounted the incident to my wife that she pointed out to me, with obvious embarrassment, that by inadvertently converting an "o" to an "a" (i.e., okosaremashite 起こされてまして to okasaremashite 犯されてまして) I had managed to tell my Japanese guests not, as I had intended, 'Last night I was awakened by my wife,' but rather 'Last night my wife raped me.' What a difference one lousy vowel can make!"

Pokkii
Pocky

Anyone who has spent time in Japan is probably familiar with Pocky, a snack made of pretzel-like sticks coated with chocolate. The bright red package stands out in shops and train station kiosks everywhere. Americans might tend to pronounce the name as it is spelled in English, i.e., rhyming with “hockey,” but the katakana on the side of the package (ポッキー) reveals that in Japan they are called Pokkii, which sounds more like “pokey.” The name comes from the snapping sound that they make when eaten.

- this effect might also be used for cracking knuckles, the snapping of a twig, etc.
- the small tsu (ッ) at the end indicates that the sound is cut off sharply.

Criminal Defense Stories

A book on legal defense practices, published by the Japanese government — in manga form!

by Frederik L. Schodt

One way to learn about Japan's legal system is to read manga. And a particularly good one to read is Mangaban: Keiji Bengo Monogatari マンガ版: 刑事弁護ものがたり, or "Criminal Defense Stories: The Manga Version." It's an "educational" manga book, which isn't particularly unusual, since manga today are used to impart information on everything from the stock market to nuclear power. What makes it rather novel is that it is published by the Japanese government; specifically, by the Printing Office of the Ministry of Finance.

Criminal Defense Stories is part of a series of books published in conjunction with the Bengo Jitsumu Kenkyūkai 弁護実務研究会, or "Society for the Study of Legal Defense Practices," covering subjects such as divorce proceedings, automobile accidents, wills and inheritances, renting houses, and leasing land. Most of the books are text-only, but some, such as those on criminal defense and land leasing, have also been turned into manga versions.

After a brief introduction explaining that criminal defense is a fascinating field because it is also the study of human behavior, seven actual legal cases are presented in 244 pages. All are interesting in their own right, both for what they reveal about Japanese law practice, and about the educational manga format.

The first case took place in 1970, at a camp in Nagano Prefecture. A group of students from a Tokyo high school rugby team were engaged in strenuous training. One of the students suddenly died, and the police suspected shigoki しごき, or "hazing," to be the cause. The high school teacher in charge was arrested and charged with involuntary manslaughter. On top of that, the parents of the student sued the teacher and his school for 15 million yen. At the district court level the teacher was found innocent, but the prosecutors appealed. At the superior court level the first verdict was thrown out and the man was given 2 months' incarceration with a year's probation; then the defense appealed to the Supreme Court but their suit was rejected. And finally, the school ended up paying the dead boy's parents a court-advised settlement fee of 13.5 million yen. The entire process took seven years.

The final verdict was clearly a defeat for the defense, but the trials illustrated the problems of assigning responsibility in a case where the facts were in dispute. Was the student a victim of hazing or overzealous training, or was he the victim of ill health and bad luck? How much responsibility did the supervising teacher have? These are difficult questions to explore in manga format, but the authors and artists do a good job in this and other cases, quoting throughout the

The narration is dry and objective, but the illustration presents the human side of the story. This scene shows the death of the high school rugby athlete mentioned above.

The background leading up to the legal case can be a lot like ordinary manga. This example is from the case of the day laborers who steal money from a drinking buddy.

Inevitably, educational manga tend to become much wordier than those devoted purely to entertainment, and the artwork suffers from lack of hyperbole and thrilling action—there are no titillating sex scenes or gory shoot-outs. Nonetheless, the drawings make the information more accessible, and convey the "emotive" information; panels showing expressions on lawyers' faces, the nervousness of witnesses, and cigarettes piling up in ashtrays during lawyers' strategy meetings, are worth thousands of words.

buddy and bash him in the head with a sake bottle; a gangster-type who is charged with the rape (which he vehemently denies) of a young woman friend; and a famous case that occurred in 1953 when a radio salesman was murdered in his sleep and his wife was charged with the murder.

In the last case, the woman confessed to the police but later claimed that her confession had been coerced. She was found guilty, despite considerable evidence to the contrary, and all her subsequent appeals were denied, as were her petitions for a retrial. Finally, nearly thirty years later, she was retried and cleared of all charges but she died of cancer shortly before the verdict was issued. Her case became the theme of several books and a film in Japan, and the episode in Criminal Defense Stories is used to illustrate how difficult it has been until recently to obtain a retrial in Japan.

For the average person, there is a great deal to be learned from manga like Criminal Defense Stories. Legal terms (of which there are many) are footnoted and explained simply at the bottom of the page. The legal process—of indictments, trials, appeals, and convictions—is introduced in the context of interesting stories, and also in a supplementary text section at the back of the book. For non-Japanese Criminal Defense Stories gives many insights into the peculiarities of Japan's legal system, and shows how it deals with problems that occur fairly regularly, such as deaths through group hazing and confessions that in the past were frequently coerced. Perhaps reflecting a general desire to avoid confrontation, in nearly every case introduced the lawyers for the defense approach the victims or their relatives to achieve some sort of settlement either to avoid having the case go to trial, or to have the charges reduced. In one instance, the prosecutor helps the defense lawyers by calling up a particularly intransigent party to a dispute and getting him to agree to a settlement.

The language used in Criminal Defense Stories is considerably more sophisticated than that used in more commercial manga, and there are no handy pronunciation keys (furigana) given for difficult kanji characters, as there are in many manga for young people. Nonetheless, this is certainly easier to read than more academic books. My strongest criticism of this book is that the artist (Izumi Maki) is given short shrift, and only mentioned in the fine print at the back.

Christmas in Japan

This imported holiday has taken on a uniquely Japanese flavor

by Anne Pepper

"Let's Santa!" screams the headline of a trendy Tokyo magazine as December approaches.

In a country that has enthusiastically adopted Halloween and Mother's Day along with Buddhist and native Shintō festivals, it's not surprising to find Christmas on the holiday calendar as well. When December comes, the great Ginza emporiums rival Bloomingdale's or Harrod's in the lavishness of their Christmas decorations. Christmas carols fill the air, impeccably decorated trees enchant tired shoppers, Santa Clauses smile—and bow—at passers-by. Seeing all this, one might think that Christmas in Japan differs little from Christmas in the West.

But like most foreign phenomena that have become part of the local culture, Christmas in the land of the rising sun has been given a Japanese twist. With scarcely one percent of the population being Christian, few think of it as a religious holiday; it is primarily a social occasion. Christmas Eve, rather than Christmas Day, is the time to celebrate, since December 25 is a normal workday in Japan.

Though Christmas has long been on the calendar, the X'mas phenomenon really took off in Japan during the flush days of the bubble economy, when marketing wizards outdid themselves coming up with new ways for people to spend their money. Christmas was a natural. Everybody knew there was a holiday called Christmas, but few were inclined to pull out all the stops until retailers, the hospitality industry, and the mass media pointed the way.

As a result, in the late 1980s Christmas became the trendiest holiday on the annual calendar. To a newly affluent generation of Japanese, it was marketed as an occasion to go on a spending spree and have a romantic night on the town. A date on Christmas Eve, done properly, could cost a man an entire month's salary. Tokyo's toniest hotels were the place to take a girl if you really wanted to impress her. The more famous the hotel, the more famous would be the entertainer doing the dinner show. Formal dress was required by most hotels to attend these shows: tuxedos for men, long dresses for women. The meal would be continental, with numerous courses and frequent changes of wine. Champagne for the really extravagant spenders, or, if the man had reserved a room for overnight, he might have arranged for a bottle of iced champagne to be waiting upstairs after the show.

The other essential element of such an evening was the Christmas gift which the young Romeo was expected to present to his fair maiden. Lest there be any doubt as to what might be a suitable gift, all he had to do was look in one of the popular magazines for suggestions. Jewelry ranked high on the list—not just any jewelry, but particular items from prestigious stores. Tiffany's was a sure winner, so much so that long lines of young men formed outside the Tokyo branch of Tiffany's after the December issue of certain magazines hit the stand. One year, Tiffany's was wiped clean out of a particular ring, leaving legions of dejected Romeos to settle for second best.

To be sure that a Christmas Eve reservation was secure at a leading hotel, bookings were made several months in advance. In many cases, the reservation was made even before the young man knew who his date for the evening would be. Christmas Eve became the most important night of the year to have a date—no self-respecting single in Japan would admit to spending the evening home alone. To help unattached young men and women find a date for the most romantic night of the year, department stores and other institutions started arranging get-acquainted parties in advance of the Christmas season. Hotels, protecting themselves from last-minute cancellations should a young man not be able to find a date for Christmas Eve, required that advance reservations be paid in full.

How is Christmas celebrated now that the economic bubble has burst? Conspicuous consumption is out, and a do-it-yourself Christmas is in. As usual, the popular magazines, having heralded the new trend, give plenty of tips for how to bring it off successfully. Instead of going to a fancy dinner show at a hotel on Christmas Eve, go to a Christian church and watch the service. (After this advice was published, regular worshippers were sometimes disconcerted by flashbulbs going off in the middle of the service.) Then rent a karaoke box and sing with friends. Clothing should be informal and Christmas presents and decorations should be hand-made. One magazine goes so far as to recommend eating Christmas Eve dinner at McDonald's.

But most suggest what is called in Japanese a "home party." "Buy table games your friends can play at home," advises one weekly. A department store publication proposes throwing a pot-luck dinner, and asking friends to bring something—a radical departure from traditional Japanese concepts of hospitality. "Serve sparkling wine instead of champagne," and "Buy your prepared Christmas Eve dinner at a Seven-Eleven," are some other ideas finding their way into print.

Entertaining at home has been the exception rather than the rule in postwar Japan, with its rabbit-hutch-size living quarters, but with the advent of the recession, the mass media has cast its approval on a cozy Christmas Eve at home. The warmth of the mood, they suggest, makes for a more genuine Christmas than a stuffy evening at a hotel.

The big hotels, undaunted, decided that if they couldn't feed people Christmas dinners on the premises, they would prepare complete meals that can be heated and served at home. For an extra fee, the dinners are delivered to the customer's doorstep. Christmas is now so widespread that every retailer who can figure out an angle has gotten in on the act. The Kentucky Fried Chicken chain had a leg up on other merchants, because standing in front of every one of their stores is the jovial, pot-bellied likeness of Colonel Sanders, looking for all the world like a life-sized Santa Claus. In December, a red suit and hat complete the transformation.

KFC also got a boost from the fact that chicken has become a popular Christmas dish in Japan, partly because few homes have ovens large enough to accommodate a turkey or goose. KFC's Christmas Party Barrels are snapped up so fast on December 24 that the chain does five times its usual volume on that day, to the tune of over two billion yen.

As for the dessert, there is no choice. Everyone in Japan knows that on Christmas Eve it is proper to serve a Christmas cake. They know this because bakeries throughout the country are filled with beautifully decorated cakes bearing a Santa Claus figure and a Christmas greeting spelled out in Japanese or English. In the late afternoon on December 24, piles of these cakes are displayed on tables out on the sidewalk, to catch the eye of fathers—or mothers—returning home.

Any cakes unsold are worthless on the 25th, and this has given rise to a slang phrase in Japanese. "Christmas cake" refers to a woman who has reached the age of 25 without finding a husband.

come such big business that American growers would like to get in on the action. They hope to entice Japanese into forsaking plastic trees for fir ones. But before this can happen, the growers will have to scale down their trees to the small size of most Japanese homes. One importer has suggested that the Americans develop a miniature fir similar to a bonsai tree.

The popularity of home parties doesn't mean that the streets are silent on the 24th. Christmas Eve dinner cruises are now in vogue. Since the late 1980s, Tokyo and other big cities on the water have been served by small ships that are essentially floating restaurants. They have romantic names such as Symphony or Lady Crystal, and feature Western—especially French—cuisine.

Japan's top-of-the-line passenger cruise ship, the Asuka, was first launched during the bubble economy. It offers several overnight "Christmas Cruises" in December, with cabins ranging from ¥41,000 to ¥200,000 per person. From December 21-27, the ship makes a week-long Christmas cruise to Kyushu costing ¥264,000-¥1,200,000 per person. In Kyushu, the destination is Huis Ten Bosch, an authentic Dutch-style village complete with canals and a full-scale copy of the royal palace. The hotels and restaurants at Huis Ten Bosch boast of offering the most authentic European Christmas in Japan.

For those who can't afford a cruise, but who want to get out and do something spectacularly different with a date on Christmas Eve, a helicopter ride at twilight is sure to impress.

Another "in" place to take a date on Christmas Eve is Tokyo Disneyland. TDL stays open late on December 24, and is always mobbed with dating couples. When the park closes for the evening, they head for one of the nearby resort hotels, where, naturally, a reservation has been booked well in advance.

The idea of a fun-filled "ibu" has captivated not only Japan's swinging singles. Since married women rarely get an opportunity to go out on the town with their husbands, some have seized on Christmas Eve as an occasion to insist that hubby take them out. This gives them a chance to dress up in their best Western finery—a chance that doesn't come along very often. And if hubby can't be corralled for a Christmas night celebration, a group of matrons might dress up and go out on their own.

Perhaps hubby is out entertaining clients, for Christmas Eve is also an ideal occasion to arrange something special for important corporate contacts.

The present Emperor was born on December 23, and custom has it that an emperor's birthday shall be a national holiday. This has been a great boon to the Christmas industry, because it puts people in a holiday mood the day before Christmas Eve. It has also been a plus for the travel industry. On years when December 23 falls on a Friday or Monday, they can offer longer than usual Christmas getaways. Holiday packages to Southeast Asia, Micronesia, and even Hawaii are snapped up eagerly by single travelers, especially young working women. Christmas travel offers them very good value for money, whereas travel a week later, during the New Year holidays, carries a peak season surcharge.

About the time the bubble economy collapsed, a new type of urban leisure park appeared in Japan, and these are proving immensely popular with singles on a date. All are going after the Christmas trade by grafting Santa Claus and special holiday events onto their usual attractions. Wild Blue Yokohama's main attraction is a mammoth indoor pool where people can swim and surf, and a

Religion in Japan

by Christopher Perrius

- New Wine: the Cultural Shaping of Japanese Christianity. David Reid. Berkeley: Asian Humanities Press, 1991. 199 pages, $45 (cloth), $15 (paper)

Maruzen department store in Tokyo introduced Christmas presents in 1877; Christmas cards and cakes followed a few years later, and eventually the day became a public festival of sorts. The sudden re-importation of foreign religion during the modernizing Meiji period has yet to achieve much success—the number of Christian Japanese hovers around one percent, with a slight decline in the eighties. But Christmas Eve has become the hottest date-night of the year—why? None of the works under review here devote any space to examining the popular manifestations of Christian culture in Japan; however, the two more theoretical works serve as an interesting point of reference while searching for an answer.

The two works that are concerned with theoretical frameworks for understanding religion in Japan are New Wine (by David Reid) and Japanese Religion and Society (Winston Davis). Both are written by religious scholars whose methods look at religion as a social construct. The cover of New Wine, which shows a chalice made in Japanese teacup yakimono style with the rising sun (risen Son?) behind it, makes a promise the work doesn't quite fulfill. Introduced as the culmination of David Reid's career, it reads more like a "greatest hits" of essays from the Japanese Journal of Religious Studies, which he has edited for some years.

Readers looking for a history of Christianity in Japan, or even for an overview of its status today, will have to look elsewhere. Instead, New Wine offers a thumbnail sketch of the history of religion in Japan that is too brief for the novice and too basic for readers with some familiarity with the subject, and then moves on to a confusing exploration of the decline of organized religion as it applies to Christianity in Japan. The remainder of the book contains several studies of the influences of the native religions on Christianity, especially Buddhist ancestral rites. These studies are too narrow in focus (e.g., what percentage of Christians with a butsudan in their home also have a photo on it?) to interest anyone other than scholars, who clearly are his audience, and Reid is a very cautious scholar who would rather statisticate than speculate on the provocative hypotheses that he raises and then leaves hanging.

The most readable section for the general student of Japanese culture presents several case studies of the relation between church and state in Japan; best known is the Yasukuni Jinja issue, an ongoing debate over official visits by the Prime Minister to this shrine to commemorate war dead. Both Reid and Davis discuss in detail another pivotal event, the heated conflict in the late 60s among members of the United Church of Christ in Japan (Nihon Kirisuto Kyōdan) over the Church's participation in a state-sponsored exposition. Reid sees Christianity as the best possible internal pressure for discouraging the cozy relations between nationalist Shinto religion and the government, but he admits that "at first glance it may seem implausible to expect effective pressure of any kind from the infinitesimal and divided Christian group." Based on his analysis, it seems that way at second glance, too.

So what about Christmas Eve? It certainly seems to be an instance of secularization (which entails either the decline of religious beliefs or their reorientation into other, "non-religious" practices), but a strange, transplanted one. Davis includes a fairly lengthy narrative of the suppression of traditional local festivals by the modern-minded Meiji government, in the name of decorum, frugality and nation-building. Indeed, the festival as a national spectacle is very useful for creating a sense of nationhood—of belonging not to a village hostile to the state, but to The Archipelago. And in the winter, TV "wide shows" zoom around the country and show the Japanese viewer how all young people are doing Christmas Eve, or how everyone is enjoying the hatsumode rite of visiting shrines at New Year's.

So is there a decline, or a reorientation of religiosity in Japan? Both writers see a general decline, but I point the interested reader to Davis for a discussion of how the distinction between sacred and profane has always been collapsed in Japan, and so how the old sacred feelings can still be felt in contemporary, ostensibly secular ritual. Davis doesn't sacrifice content for theory, but the scholarly jargon will occasionally slow down the lay reader.

The two books featuring Ian Reader complement each other quite well. Religion in Contemporary Japan is a breezy walking tour through religious practices and events. Reader describes in charmed detail, with a lot of Japanese terms, the actions and implements of festivals, funerals, and various other ceremonies. He is not interested in theoretical frameworks, and so his "explanation" of the enthusiastic embracement of Shinto rites by Big Business is that they "affirm the caring nature of the company" and "remind employees" of the ideals of "cooperating, harmony

Computer Q&A

This issue's Computer Corner will attempt to answer some of the questions our readers have been asking. Keep those questions coming—we'll be doing more Q&A columns in future issues.

by Douglas Horn

Postscript with JLK

Q: I use PostScript for everything. According to Apple's ad on your back cover, the Japanese Language Kit (JLK) includes two TrueType fonts, but no mention is made of PostScript fonts. My understanding is that TrueType fonts will print as bitmapped fonts on a PostScript printer, and that when they are mixed with PostScript fonts in the same document, the PostScript fonts will print as usual. While certainly readable, bitmapped fonts don't approach the quality of outline fonts on a 300 dpi printer.

RON WOLFF
Orinda, CA

A: The Japanese Language Kit supports PostScript fonts. Two PostScript fonts, SaiMincho and ChuGothic, are included with the JLK in addition to one bitmapped and two TrueType fonts. These PostScript fonts must be installed during customized installation, as described on page six of the JLK's Installation and User's Guide.

Printing Japanese PostScript fonts at their highest resolution requires a Japanese PostScript laser printer such as Apple's LaserWriter NTX-J. These printers contain SaiMincho and ChuGothic in ROM, which increases the speeds at which they can be processed. Japanese TrueType fonts, which for all intents and purposes print with equal clarity, are processed by the computer and require more time and computer resources. TrueType images also have a resolution ceiling of 600 dpi—which should not affect most users.

The Japanese TrueType fonts included with JLK will print equally well to any laser printer—Japanese or not. But because the Japanese PostScript fonts included require a kanji ROM on the printer, they will look jagged on standard laser printers. For this reason they were not mentioned in Apple's advertisement.

If you are printing documents yourself on a standard laser printer, you should be quite happy with the Japanese TrueType fonts. If, on the other hand, you have a Japanese laser printer, or are having documents professionally output, then use the PostScript fonts. In the latter case, you can use your laser printer to proof the document, knowing that the resolution will be higher on the final product. (For more information on Japanese TrueType fonts, see the Computer Corner in Mangajin #19.)

Moving to Japan

Q: My wife and I will be moving to Japan sometime in late '94 or early '95 and I would like to buy my computer equipment (a 486 DOS-based machine with an external modem and a small laser printer) here in the States and then take it with me to Japan, where I have heard it can be 20-40% more expensive to buy. I will be living in the Kansai area which, I've been told, has 100 V at 60Hz. Will there be any problem in this area, with machinery made for 115-120 V at 60 Hz? If I decide to buy the equipment here, what's the most feasible way of moving it to Japan?

RON ANDREWS
Berkeley, CA

A: As US computers are finally being mass-marketed in Japan, this is becoming a popular question. Regarding the Japanese power supply, most of Western Japan, including the Kansai area, operates at 100 volts 60 hertz. Eastern Japan (including Tokyo) operates at 50 Hz. Most computers and peripherals are equipped to handle the disparity between these frequencies and US frequencies. Laser printers and scanners, however, may rely on a particular number of cycles per second (hertz) to drive internal clocks. Printers are best bought in Japan if you plan to print Japanese, as they will contain a kanji character set on ROM, which eases printing.

More important than the voltage is the fact that Japanese electrical outlets are usually of the two-prong ungrounded variety, which will not accept the three-pronged grounded plug on your computer and monitor. To remedy this, be sure to purchase a grounded to ungrounded adapter—the type that grounds itself to the building via the outlet faceplate's center screw. Buy this at a US hardware store, as they may be difficult to find in Japan. Hook this up to the cord of a surge protector/power strip with grounded plugs to protect your components.

Computers are more expensive in Japan. A price comparison between similar systems by a name brand US maker revealed a difference in price of about $800 between those sold in the US and Japan. The price difference has been decreasing steadily since US companies began selling their wares in Japan. When considering the difference between purchasing a computer in America or Japan, remember that your costs for shipping and for Japanese operating system software (included with most systems sold in Japan) will further reduce this price difference. Operating systems and applications are available in the US [See Mangajin #29 software feature] at about the same cost as in Japan.

As for the easiest and cheapest way of transporting your computer, I have two words: notebook computer. If you plan to be traveling often, this is your best bet, but if you only have to move the computer once or twice, you have two options. One is to pay the excess baggage fee and take your components as luggage. This is probably most efficient, as your equipment will arrive in Japan with you. Be aware of your commute from the airport to your new home—if it is long or requires several train changes, send the boxes via one of the airport delivery services. The second possibility is to send the packages from the US via DHL or some other international delivery company. If you have your address in Japan, you can send the computer the day before you move, and accept the packages a few days later in your new home. Many companies have size and weight restrictions on international packages, so be sure to check first.

Upgrading to JLK

Q: Douglas Horn's article ("Apple's Japanese Language Kit: Japanese Computing for the Rest of Us") on page 22 of Mangajin #27 refers to an upgrade for KanjiTalk 6.0.7 to either the Japanese Language Kit or to KanjiTalk System 7.

I paid $400 for KanjiTalk 6.0.7 last year. Recently, I replaced my Mac with a better model, and found that the new machine required System 7.1. It seemed like the JLK was then the best solution for my needs, and, unaware at the time of the upgrade, I paid the full retail price of $249 for the Japanese Language Kit at the local KanjiTalk dealer. About a month later, I read the article in Mangajin, and now I want to claim a refund from Apple for the difference between the upgrade price and the regular retail price. Can you help me?

MARK CRISPIN

Bainbridge Island, WA

A: According to Apple Computer, upgrade coupons have been sent out to all registered KanjiTalk 6.0.7 users. These coupons allow the user to upgrade to the JLK for $129 or to KanjiTalk 7 for $349. Users who have not received their coupons can obtain them from their KanjiTalk dealer.

I spoke with Apple about your problem. They realize that users pay a good deal of money for the Japanese solution for their computers, and hope to keep them satisfied. I suggest that you contact Apple Computer's main support number (800-767-2775) and make sure they are aware of your dilemma. We at Mangajin will keep pushing for a reasonable resolution.

Dictionary program

I enjoyed your survey of Japanese software in issue 29, but I notice you left out a dictionary program that you might not have been aware of. The jdic series of programs are used to look up words in a set of public domain dictionaries maintained by Jim Breen. "Edict" has English meanings of over 60,000 Japanese words, and "Kanjidic" has information about all of the kanji. "Jdic" and "xjdic" are programs by Jim Breen to look up words in these dictionaries on the IBM and under X-windows. I have written a Macintosh version called (what else?) MacJDic. The most recent versions of these programs can be found over the internet by anonymous ftp at monu6.cc.monash.edu.au, and are probably also available at other on-line services. The nicest thing about these programs is that they are free. For those readers of Mangajin that do not access to online services, or cannot find these programs, I am willing to send out the latest version of MacJDic, along with the dictionaries, for $10.00 ($20.00 overseas) to pay for shipping and media. Just contact me at the address below.

Hanko: a key of life

As has been discussed in previous articles, the hanko (seal or stamp) is an important part of a Japanese person's life. Although it came into common use in Japan only during the Edo period (1603-1867), the seal has a long history in other countries.

The seal dates back to the ancient Mesopotamian Era, over 5000 years ago. Spreading west and east, it became an important part of Chinese culture by the time of the Han Dynasty (202-220 AD). As one saying goes, "Seals originate from the Han Dynasty; poetry, from the Tang Dynasty." Like so many other traditions, the seal came to Japan from China.

Special properties of the seal

In ancient times, the seal was a symbol of authority as well as a treasure used in magic. Chinese politician and martial strategist Shokatsu Komei (181-234) said, "The seal adorned with jewels is a symbol of trust." Reinforced by the stories of triumphs and tragedies it has brought on, the hanko is believed to have a talismanic quality even today. Some businessmen have a pocket made on the inside of their trousers or a leather pouch for carrying their seal close to their skin wherever they go. They trust the seal to watch over its owner's actions and thoughts, performing its function only in the right circumstances, protecting them from misfortune. When a person cannot succeed in any project or business, he or she may place the blame on his or her seal and have another one made.

Seal craftsmen capitalize on this belief. Frequently advertised in newspapers and magazines are seals "handcrafted by the best engravers using the finest material that ensure great success in business and life." Their prices have also an impressive number of zeros.

Fortune-telling and seals

Specialists say that the hanko advertised in this way are actually shoddy pieces of work: characters are engraved incorrectly and the materials are of poor quality. When these specialists' patrons ask for a "good-luck seal," they get the added service of a fortune-teller advising on the form of the characters to use. Fortune-telling covers many areas, from family to business, friendship, finances, property, housing and much more.

Of the many methods of telling fortunes, one is by counting the strokes in the kanji characters of names. When necessary, the characters are altered to have an auspicious number of strokes. One drawback to these lucky seals is apparent when legal questions arise. In investigations of inheritance fraud or embezzlement, registered seal impressions on documents need to be verified, and seals with simplified or abbreviated characters are hard to verify.

Legal concerns

The police warn the public against producing seals with altered characters as well as against producing two seals with the same imprint. Many people, however, order two of the same seal in case one is forgotten or lost. In the case of a crisis or misfortune, some people keep the spare with a trusted ally. The police interdiction does not stop the seal craftsman from accepting a more lucrative order either. He makes the seals look so similar, they could pass for being identical. On one of the seals he might make, for example, the "hook" on a character stroke or some other feature slightly different, detectable only by examining enlarged photographic images of the seal impressions.

BASIC JAPANESE through comics

Lesson 31 • Sasuga

When translating a foreign language, there are some words that have a neat and tidy English equivalent, and some that don't. Sasuga is one of the latter. The concept of sasuga, however, is quite simple and a few good manga examples and a little explanation should be sufficient to clarify it, even for beginners.

Sasuga is translated most simply as "as you'd expect." It's generally an expression of awe or admiration, used when someone who is expected to be good at something proves to be truly skillful or gifted. For example, when Michael Jordan makes a game-winning 3-point shot at the buzzer, you could say, "sasuga," meaning, "That's just what you would have expected from Michael Jordan." Sasuga does have some similarity with yappari (Basic Japanese #27), since it indicates that an outcome is "as expected," but sasuga is usually more specifically linked to someone or something's reputation, rather than the expectations of the observer. It's also used mostly in a positive sense, although two of our examples illustrate exceptions. Get this concept down and your Japanese friends will be saying, "Sasuga nihongo ga umai!" ("As would be expected of you, your Japanese is good!")

"That's a pro for you."

Watching a pro at work can lead to exclamations of sasuga. Here, a customer at a ryōtei (traditional Japanese restaurant) is awed by the chef's sashimi-slicing technique.

Customer: さすが、うまい もん ですね。
Sasuga, umai mon desu ne.
 as expected skillful (emph.) is colloq.
 "As you'd expect, he's really good."
 "That's a pro for you, he's really good!"
 (PL3)

Shachō: あたりまえ や。
Atarimae ya.
 a matter of course is
 "Of course!" (PL2)

- mon is a contraction of mono, which in this usage serves mainly as emphasis.
- ya is a dialect version of da.

Sasuga + position or title

The experienced caddy Chitta rates a sasuga when he tells his client that the opponent's shots are all going left, and points out that this is a good chance to take the lead. Using sasuga implies that he fulfills the expectations that people have because of his position/reputation.

“Just as you'd expect from a great caddy. You're not just reading the course, but the opponent's game as well!” (PL2)

Sound FX: ポン
Pon
 (sound of a pat on the shoulder)

Chitta: にははは、それほどでも...
Nya ha ha, Sore hodo demo...
 (laugh) to that extent even
“Ah ha ha. It's not such a big deal.” (PL2-3)

- saying sassuga (doubling the “s” sound) adds emphasis.
- adding the prefix 名 (mei, lit. “name”) to a title or position is like saying, “the noted/distinguished/celebrated ...”
- yonde-ru is a contraction of yonde-iru, from yomu, “read.”

Determined to earn money to help her grandfather build a house, Izumi takes on a part-time job with some other students helping one of her professors. Her previous training as an OL (office lady) stands her in good stead and her efficiency elicits a sasuga from her co-workers.

- dake atte (“as might be expected from ...”) is similar in meaning to sasuga and is frequently used in combination with it.

For someone you look up to

In this example from Urusei Yatsura, Ton-chan has been implanted with a seed that bestows super-human strength as long as the sun is shining on him. In a fight, he rips a tree out of the ground by its roots, but then clouds block the sun, he loses his power, and the tree falls on him. When the sun comes out again seconds later, he regains his strength and pushes the tree off with one hand. His little sister expresses her admiration with sasuga—implying she never doubted he could do it.

“Sound” FX: ばっ
Ba!
(effect of a sudden movement)

Asuka: さすがはおにいさま。
Sasuga wa onii-sama.
as expected as for older brother
“That’s my big brother, alright.” (PL3-4)

- the wa after sasuga is optional in this kind of usage.

Seizō has tracked down his older brother Keikichi, who left his son’s home eight years ago to live alone. Keikichi had felt restricted living with his son, and decided to move out and continue his career as a roofer even though he was almost sixty years old. Seizō has just tried to convince him to go back with his son, but finally realized that Keikichi was happy and doing well on his own. Now Seizō has a new respect for his older brother.

Seizō: いくつ になっても さすが、兄貴だ。
Ikutsu ni natte mo sasuga, aniki da.
how many (years) becomes even after all big brother is “No matter how old we get, he is, after all, my big brother.” (PL2)

- ikutsu is literally “how much,” but when used with a person refers to age.
- in this example, sasuga is similar to yahari (“as expected,” see Basic Japanese #27), but implies a feeling of respect.
- aniki is a slang/informal word for “older brother.”

Outcome is what one would expect

When referring to an outcome, sasuga usually has positive implications, but this example is an exception. In this case, sasuga gives something of a sarcastic tone.

Employee: 会社 に 2晩 泊まる と
Kaisha ni futa-ban tomaru to company/office at 2 nights stay over if/when “Staying at the office two nights in a row . . .”

さすがに 汗くさい なー。
sasuga ni ase-kusai nā.
 of course/really stinking of sweat (colloq.)
 “. . . just as you’d expect, I really stink of sweat.” (PL2)

Sound FX: くん
Kun
 (sound of smelling/sniffing)

- sasuga ni could be replaced with yahari yappari (“as expected/naturally”) in this example, but sasuga ni feels a bit more emphatic — “I really stink.”

This scientist is an expert at analyzing photos taken by spy satellites. His crew has just used satellite photos to locate a missile site in the Middle East, and he is amazed at the satellite’s capabilities.

Dr. Bellmeyer:

さすがに、KH-13 軍事 偵察 衛星!
Sasuga ni, kei-etchi jūsan gunji teisatsu eisei!

信じがたい 解像度 だ!
Shinjigatai kaizōdo da!
 hard to believe resolution is “That’s a KH-13 military reconnaissance satellite for you! Unbelievable resolution!” (PL2)

- adding the suffix -gatai to a verb gives the meaning “hard to . . .” The verb here is shinjiru, “believe,” so shinjigatai = “hard to believe.”
- the scientist’s name is written ベルマイヤ (Berumaiya) in katakana, so the English spelling Bellmeyer seems like a reasonable guess.

Living up to a reputation

Mr. Nakamura appears to be a harmless, aging Japanese tourist, but he is actually an assassin. His camera is booby-trapped to jab the user in the eye with a poisoned needle when the shutter button is pressed. He asks his unsuspecting victim, the vice-president of an electronics company, to take his picture. The victim is impressed that there seems to be a zoom feature built into the small, automatic camera.

Victim:

"I hear you're moving on the NTT project; are you serious?" (PL2)

- the man pictured in this panel is Amakasu.
- ugoite-ru is a contraction of ugoite-iru, from ugoku, "move."
- 電々 (denden) is short for Denden Kōsha, which is short for Nippon Denshin Denwa Kōsha (Nippon Telegraph and Telephone Public Corporation).

Amakasu: (on other end of phone)

ほう、さすが 地獄耳!!
Hō, sasuga jigoku-mimi!
 well, as you'd expect hell-ears
"Well, no wonder they call you jigoku-mimi!" (PL2)

- the man pictured in this panel is Suzuki.
- jigoku-mimi, lit. "hell-ears," is used to refer to very sharp ears, and by extension, to someone who always seems to be in touch with events, and from whom no secrets can be kept.

Sasuga no

Faithful readers of Mangajin are familiar with Tanaka-kun, the salaryman antihero of a four-frame manga series bearing his name. Here, Tanaka-kun asks his boss if there is something he can do, but the boss is reluctant to give him anything difficult or important. This is another example of sasuga in a negative context.

Boss: この手紙をポストに入れてきてくれ
Kono tegami o posuto ni irete kite kure!
 this letter (obj.) post box to put in for me and come back

これならさすがの田中くんも
Kore nara sasuga no Tanaka-kun mo
 this if it is reputable/notorious (name-hon.) even/also ミスはしないだろう。 misu wa shinai darō.

 mistake as-for won't do probably/surely

“Go mail this letter for me. Even you with your reputation surely can’t bungle that.” (PL2)

FX: ガックリ
Gakkuri
 (effect of being disappointed)

- irete kite kure is from the -te forms of ireru (“insert”) and kuru (“come”), plus kure, which after a -te form makes an abrupt request or relatively gentle command. The -te form of a verb followed by a form of kuru means “(go) do the action and then return to the present location.”
- misu is an abbreviation of the English word “mistake.” Misu o suru means “Make a mistake,” and Misu o/wa shinai is the negative form.
- Tanaka-kun still manages to botch this task, putting the letter in the wrong post box.

A tasty conclusion

These people were all helping Tagawa move out of his office, and it came time for a lunch break. Just as they were trying to decide what to eat, they received a surprise delivery of food from one of Tagawa’s friends, a restaurant proprietress.

Tagawa: うまい!!
Umai!

Friend: 本当おいしい。

Tagawa: さすが一流の料亭のおにぎりだ。
Sasuga ichi-ryū no ryōtei no onigiri da.
 as you'd expect first class restaurant's rice balls are “Now that’s a first class restaurant’s onigiri.”

- ryōtei are traditional Japanese restaurants.
- onigiri are balls of rice, often with umeboshi (dried, pickled plums) or salmon, etc., in the middle. They are standard fare for any kind of “take along” lunch in Japan, much as sandwiches are in the U.S.

Sesse sesse (effect of working diligently and hurriedly)
- toko is a contraction of tokoro, "place."
  - sagashichatta is a contraction of sagashite shimatta, from sagasu ("search"). Shimatta after the -te form of a verb can imply regret, but in this case it's essentially just for emphasis: "I really searched" → "I searched all over."
  - sabū-! is an exclamatory form of sabui, a corruption of samui ("cold").

- FX: せっせ せっせ
Sesse sesse (effect of working diligently and hurriedly)
- yukue fumei, literally meaning "destination unknown," is the term used for "missing persons."
  - . . . to iu koto is a quotative expression used in making explanations, and ni shitoku is a contraction of ni shite oku, from ni suru ("[will] make it . . ."). Since oku after a -te form means to do the action and let the result stand, yukue fumei to iu koto ni shitoku literally means "I'll make the explanation that you are missing and leave it at that."
  - on refers to a feeling of obligation/debt of gratitude incurred when someone does you a favor. On ni kiru is an idiom acknowledging the debt with gratitude, like "I owe you one," or "I'll be eternally grateful."

Bideo de tottoite kurenai ka na?
video with record and leave won't [you] do for me I wonder
“I wonder if you wouldn't record it for me?” (PL2)

- tottoite is a contraction of totte oite, from toru (lit. “take/capture”) and oku (“set down/leave”). When toru is written with the kanji 録る, it means “record (on audio or video tape).” Oku after the -te form of a verb means to do the action and let the result stand.
- -te kurenai ka na makes an informal request, “I wonder if you wouldn't . . . ?”

what? still/as yet can't do can't believe (emph.)
“What? You still don't know how to do that? I can't believe it!” (PL2)

- since 尚 means “picture,” 録画 rokuga refers specifically to a video recording. Rokuga sureba is a conditional “if” form of rokuga suru, the verb, and the expression . . . ba ii means “it is good/enough if (the action is done),” implying “all you/I have to do is . . .” or “what you/I should do is . . .”
- dekinai is the negative of dekiru (“can do”), and shinjirarenai is the negative of shinjirareru (“can believe”), from shinjiru (“believe”).

- itte is the -te form of iu (“say”) and yareba is a conditional form of yaru (“give”), which after a -te form implies “do to/for someone.”
- yokatta is the past form of ii/yoi (“good/fine”), so . . . ba yokatta is the past form of . . . ba ii → “what you/I should have done is . . .” The quotative tte at the beginning makes the previous frame the content of what he should have said.
- nasakenē is a masculine slang version of nasakenai, which when said of oneself or one's own situation means “pathetic/wretched/disgraceful.”

1 Salaryman: 女の子にプレゼントするのってむずかしいなー。
Onna no ko ni purezento suru no tte muzukashii nā.

Manki Jewelers

- onna no ko is literally "female child," but it's routinely used (by both genders) for referring to unmarried young women into their mid-twenties, including OLs. If you wish to avoid this usage, onna no hito ("female person") is a perfectly acceptable alternative for referring to a woman.
- suru is a contraction of suru ("do"). Purezento suru = "make/give a present," but in this context "choose" is clearly more appropriate. No is a "nominalizer" that makes onna no ko ni purezento suru into a noun, "giving a present to a girl" → "choosing a present for a girl."

Demo donna no ga ii no kana?

"But I wonder what kind of thing would be good?"
"But I wonder what she would like?" (PL2)

- yappa is a colloquial contraction of yappari, which implies the item/action/etc. mentioned somehow fits expectations. In this case it gives the feeling that some kind of accessory would be the "natural/logical/safest" choice.
- ka na asks a conjectural question, "I wonder (if)/is it perhaps (that)?"

Sound FX: ジングル ベー...
Jinguru be-... Jingle bells...

- komatta is the plain/abrupt past form of komaru, "to be faced with a problem/caught in a tight spot," and nā adds emphasis. Komatta nā serves as an exclamation of distress/uncertainty when faced with a problem you're not immediately sure how to solve: "Oh no!/What a fix!/What'll I do?"

4 Salaryman: とわいうで、これ。

Envelope: 商品券
Shōhin-ken Gift Certificate

- to iu wake de implies he has just finished making an explanation — i.e., the first three frames are in fact the content of that explanation.
- kore is literally "this," but it's often used when holding something out for another person to take, like English "Here."
- o-seibo (almost always with the honorific o-) refers to a gift given at the end of the year as a token of gratitude for favors received during the year, typically to one's boss or other social superiors. Department stores take advantage of this custom by providing an amazing array of special gift packages as well as by pushing gift certificates.

1 Mother A: ご家族でクリスマスですか?
Go-kazoku de kurisumasu desu ka?

“(Is that for a) Christmas (celebration) with your family?” (PL3)

Mother B: ええ、まあ。
Ee, mā. yes (interj.)
“Yes, you could say that.” (PL3)

- ee is a fairly polite “yes,” and mā works like a vague “sort of/in a way/I suppose so,” to confirm what the other person has said in a general way.
- the humor in this manga is built on a Japanese saying that women over 25 are like Christmas cakes left unsold on the 25th of December: i.e., hard to sell (in the marriage market).

2 Mother A: うちなんか、娘たちが大学生になってから夫婦だけ。さびしいもんですわ。
Uchi nanka, musume-tachi ga daigakusei ni natte my/our house as-for daughter-(plur) (subj) coll. stud. to became kara fūfu dake. Sabishii mon desu wa.
since husband & wife only lonely thing/situation is (fem. colloq.)
“At our house, since our daughters became college students, (it's been) just the two of us. It's rather lonely.” (PL3)

Mother B: そーですか。
Sō desu ka.
that way/so is it? “Is that so?” (PL3)

- nanka is a colloquial nado (“a thing like”), but can serve to mark the topic like wa, usually when the rest of the sentence is negative in some way. Here the situation described is a “negative” one.
- kara = “from” and kara after the -te form of a verb basically means “from the time” that action took/takes place, so it can become either “since” or “after” in English depending on the tense of the verb.
- mon is a contraction of mono (“thing”); it can literally be thought of as referring to the “situation” here, but its main effect is to add light emphasis.

3 Mother B: ワタシってしあわせなのかしら?
Watashi te shiawase na no kashira?
I/me (quote) happy/fortunate (explan.) I wonder if “I wonder if I'm actually a fortunate woman?” (PL2)

Mother B: でも、うちの娘ども...
Demo, uchi no musume-domo... but my/our house's daughter-(plur.)
“But my daughters...” (PL2)

Sign: パート 急募
Pāto Kyūbo
part [time workers] rush/sudden recruitment “Part Timers Wanted Immediately”

- the quotative te here serves like the topic marker wa.

4 Mother B: 25 と 28 だしな。うーん。
nijūgo to nijūhachi da shi na. U-n.
25 and 28 are and besides aren't they (moan)
“are 25 and 28... Ahhh.” (PL2)

Daughter 1: あっ、ケーキだ!
A! Kēki da!
“Oh! It's the cake!” (PL2)

Daughter 2: じんぐる べーる...
Jinguru bēru...
“Jingle bells...”

- to is “and” for between two nouns, while shi is an emphatic “and” for linking two parts of a complex sentence: “and besides/and what's more.” It's hard to get the feeling of this shi in the translation, but it implies she doesn't think of herself as fortunate, especially since her daughters are 25 and 28.

Yōichi: 年賀状 が きてる ぞ
Nenga-jō ga kite-ru zo.
New Year's cards (subj.) have come/are here (emph.)
"The New Year's cards are here." (PL2)

- New Year's cards in Japan are always postcards, and must be marked nenga on the address side to ensure that they are held at the post office for delivery on New Year's Day. Though Christmas has now long been a major commercial holiday, and some Japanese send Christmas cards, New Year's remains the holiday that is universally observed — in part by exchanging nenga-jō.
- kite-ru is a contraction of kite-iru ("has/have come" → "is/are here").

Saitō Haruko te dare ya?
(name) (quote) who is it?

Kuriko: あっ
A! "Oh." (PL2)

- te is a colloquial quotative form used here as an equivalent of the topic marker wa ("as for ..."). In Tokyo speech it tends to be tte, but the single consonant te is common in Kansai.
- dare ya (Kansai dialect) = dare da (Kantō/standard) = "who is it?" — but using ya does not sound nearly as rough as da.

- sense is a colloquial/dialect abbreviation of sensei ("teacher").
- shimatta, used after the -te forms of verbs to show that the action was regrettable/undesirable, can be used independently as a cry of dismay.
- naruhodo expresses one's understanding of, or interest in, what one has heard/observed/experienced: "aha/indeed/interesting." Here he is responding more to the card in his hand than to what Kuriko says.

住所 / 氏名 / 卒業年度
Jūsho / Shimei / Sotsugyō Nendo
Address / Name / Graduating Year

- sasuga implies the action is "fitting for/what one might expect of" a teacher. The tone is of admiration at the teacher's insight/forethought.
- tsukete is the -te form of tsukeru, literally "attach/stick something (to)," but in this case it has the meaning of "mark (with)." Maru o tsukete = "mark with a circle and ..." → "circle and ..."
- hensō is a noun referring to the action of "sending back/returning." ... No koto after an action noun can make a gentle command/admonition.
- 謹賀新年 kinga shinnen is the likely greeting on the other part of the card. This form of "Happy New Year" is used on signs and cards, but not in speech.

Narration: 元日
Ganjitsu New Year's Day

Yōichi: もう 昼やぞ。
Mō hiru ya zo.
already noon is (emph.)
"It's already noon." (PL2)

Sound FX: んが nga (sound of snoring or catching breath in sleep)

- ya typically replaces da ("is/are") in Kansai dialect, so hiru ya zo is equivalent to hiru da zo.

2

Sound FX: こっくり こっくり
Kokkuri kokkuri (effect of nodding off)

Mother: ね正月 やねー。
Ne-shōgatsu ya ne.
sleeping New Year's is isn't it/she
"It's a sleeping New Year's for her, isn't it?" (PL2)

- ne is from 寝る neru ("sleep"), so ne-shōgatsu is literally a "sleeping New Year's," a word for spending New Year's catching up on sleep. Ganjitsu specifically refers to "New Year's Day," but shōgatsu can refer to the full month of January (the kanji 月 means "moon/month"), to just the first day of January, or sometimes to several days at the beginning of January.
- ya ne = da ne = "is, isn't it."

Yōichi: よう ねる なあ。
Yō neru nā.
well/a lot sleeps (emph.)
"She sure sleeps a lot." (PL2)

Kuriko: おやすみー。
Oyasumi- "Good night." (PL2)

Sound FX: くー
Kū (sound of even breathing while asleep)

- ya is dialect/informal for yoku, the adverb form of the adjective ii/yoi ("good/fine"). The adverb can be used both to mean "do the action well" and "do the action a lot/frequently." The colloquial alteration of yoku to yō is quite common throughout Japan, but in Kansai dialect it's standard for ku to be dropped or replaced by a long vowel in the adverbial ku form of all adjectives.
- oyasumi is the standard "good night"; its PL3 form is oyasumi nasai. The expression can be used both when saying "good night" in bed/at bedtime, as here, as well as for "goodbye" when parting from close acquaintances late at night (though not if the parting is for a journey).

Narration: 二日 Futsuka
second day January 2nd

Kuriko: なあ、どれ が 初夢 かなあ。
Nā, dore ga hatsu-yume ka nā.
say which (subj.) year's first dream I wonder "Say, I wonder which one was my year's first dream?" (PL2)

Yōichi: 好きな んに しとき。
Suki-na n ni shitoki.
liked/preferred one to make it and leave
"Make it whichever one you liked (best)." (PL2)

- in Kansai dialect, women routinely use na and nā, though in "standard" Japanese they are generally thought of as masculine. A Tokyo woman would normally be expected to say ne, dore ga hatsuyume kashira.
- hatsu-yume (lit. "first" + "dream") refers to one's first dream of the new year, which is supposed to reveal one's fortune for the coming year.
- suki-na n is dialect for suki-na no, with no meaning "one/thing": "the liked/preferred one" → "the one you like." Shitoki is a contraction of a dialect command form, shite oki, from shite oku, the -te form of suru ("do/make") with oku, which after a -te form means to do the action and let it be/leave it at that.

Wife: さすがに クリスマス セールの デパート は
Sasuga ni kurisumasu sēru no depāto wa

 すごい 人出 や わ。
sugoi hitode ya wa.
 amazing/awesome turnout/crowd is (fem. colloq.)
 “Just as you’d expect, a department store with a Christmas sale is an amazing crowd.”
 “Sure enough, a department store with a Christmas sale really brings out the crowds.” (PL2)

Husband: ウム、はぐれない ように せんと な。
Umu, hagurenai yō ni sen to na.
 uh-huh not get separated so that must do (colloq.)
 “Uh-huh, we’ll have to make sure not to get separated.” (PL2)

Sound FX: ガヤ ガヤ ザワ ザワ
Gaya gaya Zawa zawa
 (clamor of many voices) (murmur/hum of crowd)

- hitode is written with kanji for “person/people” and “go/come out” → “the turnout/crowd.”
- ya typically replaces da (“is/are”) in Kansai dialect.
- umu, typically used by males of middle age and older, is a variation of the informal “hmm”/grunt of agreement/assent, un (“yes/all right/indeed”).
- hagurenai is the negative of hagureru (“be separated”).
- sen to is dialect for shinai to, which here is an abbreviation of shinai to ikenai, a “must/have to” form of suru (“do”). The expression . . . yō ni suru is literally “do so that . . .” → “make sure to,” so . . . yō ni shinai to becomes “must make sure to.”

2

Husband: あっ、いなくなった。なに を やって んだ、まったく。
A! Inaku natta. Nani o yatte nda, mattaku.

Jingoro be jingoro be
Jingle bells, jingle bells

Signs: X’mas セール
Kurisumasu Sēru
Christmas Sale

- inaku is the adverb form of inai (“not exist/not be present,” for people and other animate things), and natta is the plain/abrupt past form of naru (“become”): “become not here” → “disappear/become lost.”
- yatte n is a contraction of yatte-iru no, from varu (“do”). Asking a question with da/n da sounds very rough, so the feeling is close to “What the hell is she doing?”
- mattaku, literally meaning “completely/entirely,” is often used as an exclamation of exasperation. It can occur at either the beginning or end of the sentence.
- jingoro be is a corruption of the standard katakana rendering of “jingle bells,” ジングルベル jinguru beru, intended as a humorous touch.

3

Wife: ありゃ、おらん わ。ほんまに おとうさん ゆうたら . . .
Arya, oran wa. Honma ni otōsan yūtara . . .

 (interj.) not here (colloq.) truly father/him if say/speak of “Oh, he’s disappeared. Really, that man . . .” (PL2)

Music: ジンゴロ (ベ)
Jingoro (be)
Jingle bells . . .

- yūtara is dialect for to ittara (the quotative to is generally dropped in Kansai dialect) a conditional “if/when” form of to iu (“say . . .”), so it literally means “if I say/speak of . . .” In colloquial speech, to ittara (or its contracted form ttara) is sometimes used in place of wa to mark the topic with a feeling of disapproval/beratement, so otōsan yūtara (“speaking of Dad”) implies something like “he’s so stupid/hopeless/unreliable.”

- arya is a variation of ara, an interjection showing sudden recognition/notice of something, “oh/oh my/hey.”
- oran is the negative of oru, Kansai dialect equivalent for iru (“be/exist” for people and other animate things.)

 central/main information place/counter at (hon.)-waiting is “Mrs. Yamada from Higashi Hirayama, your husband wonders what in the world you are doing and is waiting at the main customer information counter.” (PL4)

- tsuite kinahare is dialect for tsuite kinasai, a command form of tsuite kuru (“come following” → “follow”).
- o-machi desu is the PL4 equivalent of matte-imasu (PL3) and matte-iru (PL2, “am/is/are waiting”), from matsu (“wait”).
- okusama and goshujin-sama are very polite words for referring to another person’s wife and husband, respectively.

Title: クリスマス '93

 Christmas '93

Gacha gacha
Rattle rattle (sound of turning key in lock)

2 Q: メリークリスマスー!!
Merii kurisumasu-!!
"Merry Christmas!?"

- Christmas is celebrated in Japan mostly as a secular and commercial holiday. Partly because Christmas day is not an official holiday, the main celebrating takes place on Christmas Eve. See our feature story for more details.

3 Q: 今 から 行けば ニューヨーク に は 間に合う な!
Ima kara ikeba Nyū Yōku ni wa ma-ni-au na!
 now from if go New York to as-for will be in time (colloq.)
"If I go now I guess I can (still) make it to New York in time." (PL2)

- ikeba is a conditional form of iku ("go").
- ma-ni-au come from ma ("space") + ni ("to") + au ("match/fit"), so it literally means "fit the space," but it's used idiomatically to mean "be in time (for)" (i.e., fit the space in time) or "be enough (for)."
- in reality, Q runs a small coffee shop in Tokyo, but in his fantasies he is a globe-hopping international playboy. The reference to New York is enigmatic, but it appears to be related to one of his fantasies.
- na is used as a kind of self-check/confirmation when speaking/thinking to oneself: "that seems to be the case, doesn't it?"; "that's the way it is, I guess."

4 Q: さあ、クリスマス、クリスマス。

Ehē. Hi-mi-tsu!
 (interj.) secret
"Heh heh, it's an s-e-c-r-e-t!" (PL2)

- sā is often used like "well now/all right" to prepare oneself for action or for some event to happen.
- -chan is a diminutive equivalent of -san ("Mr./Ms.") most typically used with children's names. But close friends use it among themselves at almost any age, and children use it frequently instead of -san when speaking to older people (especially when they know them well).
- stating just a topic like this with the intonation of a question (. . . wa?) asks very generally about the status/condition/etc. of that topic. The form is typically used in situations where the implied question is obvious. In this case the first question isn't enough so she tags on a second one in the same form to better define the topic.
- ehē is an interjection that usually implies the speaker is rather pleased with him/herself, whether because he/she has been complimented, has been lucky, or has a special secret (as here).
- the dots in himitsu show she says each syllable distinctly/separately, something like spelling a word out in English.

5 Noriko: わかったあ。これだなあ!
Wakattā. Kore da nā!

Nani omase itte-n no yo!
 what overly precocious/grown-up thing are saying (explan.) (emph.-?)
"What are you saying such precocious things for?" → "Stop being so precocious!" (PL2)

Q: イギリス の ジェーン から も さそわれた が、やはり...
Igirisu no Jēn kara mo sasowareta ga, yahari...
 England off/from Jane from also was invited but after all/in the end
"Jane from England invited me too, but after all..." (PL2)

- na (lengthened for emphasis) in this case asks/expects the listener to confirm what she says. Na is generally thought of as masculine, but female speakers can use it, too, in very informal conversations, with a rough feeling.
- the thumb-up gesture refers to a boyfriend/male romantic interest. (The little finger pointed straight up refers to a girlfriend/female romantic interest.)
- omase refers to a child who acts like an adult in an inappropriate way → "overly precocious."
- itte-n is a contraction of itte-iru ("are saying"), from iu ("say").
- sasowareta is the past form of sasowareru ("be invited"), passive of sasou ("invite").

and pulling together." But there are questions left unasked: of those company-paid employee funerals, how many of the recipients have died of overwork? Reader's inability (or unwillingness) to get past the surface explanations can annoy even the slightly cynical reader. A writer like Davis, however, who is interested in larger frameworks, sees all this energy spent on "harmonizing" as a sign that underlying conflicts exist, and then things get interesting as he digs into the nature of those conflicts.

Another example of Reader's style is a story he tells of an herbal medicine dealer who built a pond with two rocks joined by a Shinto straw rope in the vacant lot next to his shop in order to discourage the revelers who had been using it as a toilet. His plan worked, but people began to throw coins in it and ask what the kami was and what go-riyaku (御利益, "powers/benefits") it possessed. He put in an offertory box to collect the donations, and thought up the go-riyaku of helping ear problems. An instant god of auricular disorders! Reader cites this as an example of the "omnipresence of the spiritual in the physical world" and "the pragmatically functional attitude to religion." These explanations don't really say much because they are inserted without having provided a wider social or historical context.

Japanese Religion Past and Present is a collection of religious and historical documents and some classic academic essays (e.g. by Ruth Benedict and Takeo Doi). The large number of photos, and the wide scope and brevity of the selections make this book fun to pick up and thumb through, and the authors' introductions to each section help put them in a working context. These essays have a tendency to rely on the stereotypical evaluation—"it's for harmony"—and can even get downright giddy with the charm of exotic Japan, as in the first essay where Stefánsson likens himself and his companions at a village festival to "Gullivers in Wonderland." This is perhaps a mirror of the Japan-is-unique theory, which Davis dissects in his book. But it's Reader and friends' cup of tea, and they serve it up in a most enjoyable fashion.

After Zero

— Part II —

In the first installment: after the death of the company's founder, strange things began happening at the offices of Taiyō Electric, a major manufacturer of electric appliances.

Late at night, in deserted offices and hallways, voices and what seem to be huge eyeballs appeared, seriously frightening several employees. Two young employees, Mr. Okido and Ms. Hanamura, are assigned the task of finding a countermeasure.

Okido gathers talismans from famous shrines and temples all over Tokyo and puts them up in the offices, but the next day, they are found hanging upside down—almost like a child's prank. The shareholders' meeting is coming up, and the president is worried that word of the "ghost scare" will get out.

In a desperata effort, Ms. Hanamura is used as "bait" to lure the ghost. She works late in what seems to be a deserted office, but really, her male co-workers are lying in wait.

About the title: We have translated the title of this story, Chiisaku Utsukushii Kami (小さく美しい神), as "The Little and Beautiful Spirit." The word kami is usually translated as "god(s)," but in this story we see that it also refers to what would be called "spirits" in English.

The "ghost" appears, the co-workers spring from behind their cover, and pandemonium breaks loose. Our story picks up the next day.

- 1 Hanamura:
Inoue-san wa jitaku de nekonde-masu.
 "Mr. Inoue is at home in bed." (PL3)
Tokumaru-san wa ashi no hone otte nyūin shichaimashita.
 "Mr. Tokumura broke his leg and is in the hospital." (PL3)

- jitaku is a somewhat formal word meaning "his/her/my own house"; jitaku de = "at home."
- nekonde-(i)masu = nekonde-iru, from nekomu, which implies "taking to one's bed" due to illness or injury.
- ashi no hone = "leg bone" and otte is the -te form of oru ("break"); so ashi no hone (o) oru = "break one's leg(s)."
- nyūin shichaimashita = nyūin shite shimaimashita, from nyūin suru, "enter the hospital/be hospitalized."

- 2 Kachō:
Fū, Ōkido wa?
 "(Sigh) What about Ōkido?" (PL2)

- Hanamura: (off panel)
Sakki shiryō-shitsu ni ikimashita.
 "He went to the reference room a little bit ago." (PL3)

- 3 Hanamura:
Yumioka-san ni ai ni itta n desu.
 "He went to see Mr. Yumioka." (PL3)
- ai is from au ("meet/see") and itta is the plain abrupt past form of iku ("go"). Ai ni iku = "go to see."

- 4 Kachō:
Nanu!!
 "What?!" (PL2)
Ano, kaisha no iki-jibiki ni . . .
 "To (see) that living dictionary of our company?"
 "He went to see our company's walking encyclopedia?" (PL2)

- nanu is a colloquial/slang nani ("what").

- 3 Ōkido:
E- tto, /kita wa dotchi da?
 "Let's see, which way is north?" (PL2)

- Shikashi hiroi na, uchi no shiryō-shitsu wa.*
 "Man, our company's reference room is really huge." (PL2)

- shikashi (literally "but/however") is sometimes used at the beginning of an exclamation of surprise to emphasize the surprise, a little like "Man!/Wow!" is sometimes used in English.
- hiro is perhaps most familiar as meaning "wide," but it's also used to mean "large/spacious/expansive" when speaking of room/space.

- 6 Ōkido:
O!
 "Oh!"

- 1 Ōkido:
Yumioka-san!
 "Mr. Yumioka!" (PL2)

- Yumioka:
N?
 "Huh?" (PL2)

- 1 Yumioka:
Fu-n, yūrei sawagi nē.
 “Hmmm, a ghost scare, is it?” (PL2)
 • sawagi is more literally “uproar/disturbance.”

- 2 Yumioka: (off panel)
Sō iya, mukashi mo onaji yō-na sawagi ga atta na.
 “Now that you mention it, we had the same sort of scare once before.” (PL2)

- Okido:
E?!
 “What?!” (PL2)
 • iya is a contraction of ieba, a conditional form of iu (“say”). Sō iya = sō ieba = “if you say that” → “now that you mention it.”

- 3 Yumioka:
Dare mo inai heya kara hito no kae ga shitari...
 “Voices would come from rooms that didn't have anyone in them, or yuka o tataku oto ga kikoetari...
 “we'd hear the sound of (someone/thing) pounding on the floor, or
 • ...-tari...-tari (suru) is an expression meaning “do things like... and/or...” A form of suru (“do”) often appears or is implied at the end of the sentence, but in this case the series continues on to a clause ending in a different kind of “or.”

- 4 Yumioka:
asa ni naru to kaisha-jū no isu ga hikkurikaette-ta to ka.
 “In the morning all the chairs in the office would be knocked over.” (PL2)
 • ... to ka... to ka makes another expression for “things like... or...” If the alternatives listed are verbs, this pattern also can end in suru.

- 5 Okido:
Sore de, dō natta n desu?
 “And so what happened?” (PL3)

- 6 Yumioka:
Sendai ga na...
 “Our late chairman (said)...”
 “Mr. Matsumura said...” (PL2)

- Matsumura:
Mononoke ga iru tte koto wa, sono kaisha ni sore dake ikioi ga aru tte koto yo.
 “The fact that there are spirits/specters means that company has that much energy/power.”
 “The presence of a ghost merely shows that we are a strong company.” (PL2)
Mā, minna kowagaranaide kawaigatte yanna yo.
 “So everyone, don't be scared, give him your affection.” (PL2) ceased), proprietor/head of household/etc.

 • yanna is a contraction of yari-na, which in turn is short for yari-nasai.
 • yūrei and mononoke are close synonyms, both referring to spirits of the dead, or, more generically, to a wide variety of ghosts/specters/apparitions. But mononoke are perhaps thought of a bit more as angry spirits that haunt/attach themselves to a particular person for purposes of vengeance. In any case, Mr. Matsumura's laid-back attitude toward them is not the typical response.

- 7 Yumioka:
Sore de, sono mama utchatte oitara itsu no ma ni ka sawagi mo osamatte nā.
 “And so we just let (the ghost) be and eventually the commotion subsided.” (PL2)

- Okido:
He-, kaichō ga nē.
 “Hmm, Mr. Matsumura (said that), huh?” (PL2)

• utchatte oitara is a conditional (“when”) form of utchatte oku, from utcharu (“abandon/push aside/neglect/ignore”).

1 Yumioka:
Hore. "Here." (PL2)

2 Okido:
Kore wa?
"What is it?" (PL2)

Yumioka:
Shashi da yo. Sannen-mae ni matometa n da.
"The company history. I wrote it up three years ago." (PL2)

Sore o yomeba kaisha no koto wa subete wakaru.
"If you read that, you'll find out everything about the company." (PL2)

• 社史 shashi is from the last kanji in 会社 kaisha ("company") and 歴史 rekishi ("history").

3 Okido: (reading)
Hajime ni Matsumura Shōzō ariki . . . ka.
"In the beginning, there was Matsumura Shōzō . . . hmm." (PL2)

4 Okido: (reading)
Rikuchū, Kamihei-gun, Dobuchi-mura ni umare . . .
"Born in the village of Dobuchi in Kamihei County in Rikuchū, jinjō shōgakkō o dete sugu ni komedonya ni hōkō suru.

"he became an apprentice at a rice wholesaler as soon as he finished grade school." (PL2)

• Rikuchū is the old name of an area covering Iwate and part of Akita prefecture in northern Honshū.
• jinjō shōgakkō (lit. "ordinary elementary school") was the compulsory part of elementary education early in this century. It was a 4-year program until 1907, when it was extended to 6 years.

5 Okido: (reading)
Keisan ga tokui na ko de, jūni no toki ni wa mise no chōmen o subete kanri suru hodo ni naru.
"He was good at figures, to the extent that he was given complete charge over the shop's books at the age of 12." (PL2)

Apron:
Yamamoto-ya (shop/wholesaler's name)

On Desk: Daifukuchō
Account Book (lit. "great good fortune book")

Okido: (reading)
Soshite jūgo no toki, mise o yame, tanshin, Tōkyō ni omomuku.
"Then at fifteen, he quit the shop and headed for Tokyo alone." (PL2)

6 Yumioka:
Saikin ja, konna mono ga aru kara kantan da ga,
"These days we have things like this so it's easy, but jinjō shōgakkō dake de, bi-sekibun ga dekita chū kara, atama no ii hito datta n da nā!

"they say he could do differential and integral calculus with only a grade school (education), so he must have been a really smart fellow." (PL2)

• bibun = "differential calculus" and sekibun = "integral calculus" → bi-sekibun = "differential and integral calculus."
• chū is a contraction of quotative to iu, "(they) say . . ."

1 Yumioka:
Ma, sō yū koto mo atte, Tōkyō de denki-ya o hajimeta wake da.
"In any case, such were the circumstances, and he started an electrical appliance shop/company in Tokyo." (PL2)

Sign:
Taiyō Denki (shop/company name → Taiyō Electric)

Yumioka:
Sore kara wa tonton-byōshi yo.
"After that he went from success to success." (PL2)

1 Yumioka:

Sendai no kuchiguse wa, "Tomo wa hitori ireba ii" datta.

"Mr. Matsumura's pet saying was, 'All you need is one friend.'" (PL2)

Kekkyoku, sono tomo to wa, koko, tsumari jibun no otsumu datta n da na.

"Ultimately, that friend was, this — that is to say, his own noggin." (PL2)

- tsumari = "in other words/that is to say"
- otsumu is an informal word for "head/brain" → "noggin/noodle."

2 Okido:

Fu-n.

"Hmm." (PL2)

3 Hanamura:

E?! Oikko o kase tte?!

"What? You want to borrow my little nephew?" (PL2)

- oi = "nephew," but oikko is used when the nephew is still a small child.
- kase is the abrupt command form of okasu ("lend").
- Tte is quotative, so it's literally like saying "You say lend you my nephew?"

4 Hanamura:

Dō suru no yo? Kare mada yōchien-ji yo.

"What do you intend to do? He's still a kindergartener." (PL2)

Okido:

Miete kita n da yo, yūrei no shōtai ga.

"I'm beginning to see the true nature/identity of the ghost."

"I'm starting to get an idea of who this ghost is." (PL2)

- miete is the -te form of mieru ("can see"), and kita after a -te form can mean "began (doing)."
- his syntax is inverted. Normal order would be Yūrei no shōtai ga miete kita n da yo.

5 Okido:

Shain ga mita yūrei wa, minna kodomo mitai-na kakkō o shite-ita shi,

"The ghosts the employees saw all had the appearance of children, and

"Everyone who saw the ghost says he looked like a kid, and yatteru koto ga marude itazura daro.

"the things he does are just like (kids') pranks, right?" (PL2)

- X mitai-na Y = "Y that is like X"; kodomo mitai-na kakkō = "appearance that is like a child."
- maru de ... da = "is just like/exactly like ..."
- Replacing da with darō makes it "It's just like ... , right?/don't you think?"

6 Okido: (off panel)

Kaichō ga, sono mukashi, mononoke o kawaigatte yare ... tte itta.

"And in that long-ago (scare), Mr. Matsumura told everyone to be nice to the ghost." (PL2)

Sore mo ki ni naru n da.

"That tugs at my mind, too." (PL2)

Hanamura:

Sore ga watashi no oi to dō iu kankei ga aru no yo?

"What does that have to do with my nephew?" (PL2)

- ... ga ki ni naru is an expression for "... bothers me/is a sticking point/weights on (my) mind."

7 OLs:

Kawaii-!

"(Isn't he) cute!?" (PL2)

1 OL:
Kya (squeal of delight)

2 Sound FX:
Kyoro kyoro
(effect of shifting eyes this way and that in search of something)

3 Okido:
Shitsurei shima-su.
“Exc-u-se us.” (PL3)

• shitsurei is literally “rudeness/bad manners,” and shimasu is the PL3 form of suru (“do”), so the expression essentially means “I will do/commit a rudeness.” Shitsurei shimasu is a polite greeting used when entering someone’s room/office, to apologize for the intrusion.

4 Hanamura:
Nē, konna koto shite, ittai nan ni naru no?
“Say, what in the world will become of doing this kind of thing?”
“What in the world’s the point of all this, anyway?” (PL2)

OL:
Ara, kawaii.
“Oh, how cute!” (PL2)

• nē at the beginning of a sentence is used to get the listener’s attention, like “say/hey/look here.”
• a cultural note: persons travelling to Japan with babies or small children had best prepare themselves for a barrage of kawaii!!! from Japanese women of all ages. You may soon be convinced kawaii is the most loathsome word in the language, but try not to take it too personally. As the example here shows, it is not some egregious anti-foreign plot.

5 Okido:
Fū . . . kono ko ga mitsukete kureru to omotta n da kedo na-
“(Sigh) . . . I really thought this kid would find (the ghost) for us, but . . .” (PL2)

Hanamura:
A-, bakabakashiku natte kita.
“Ah, this is getting ridiculous.” (PL2)

• . . . to omotta n dakedo nā, typically with an elongated na for emphasis, expresses disappointment that something is not going/has not gone the way the speaker thought it would.
• bakabakashiku is the adverb form of bakabakashii (“absurd/ridiculous”).
• natte is the -te form of naru (“become”), and natte kita = “starting to become” → “becoming/getting.”

6 Tomo-chan: (off panel)
Iru yo.
“Here he is.” (PL2)

7 Tomo-chan:
Kono ko desho?
“(You mean) this kid, right?” (PL3)

- 1 Okido:
E?! Do, doko ni?
 “Huh?! Wh-where?!” (PL2)

Hanamura:
Tomo-chan, uso itcha dame yo!
 “You mustn’t lie now, Tomo-chan.” (PL2)

- -chan is a diminutive equivalent of -san (“Mr./Ms.”) used mostly with children.
- itcha dame is a contraction of itte wa dame, a prohibition form of iu (“say”). Uso (o) iu = “say/tell lies” → “lie.”
- in informal situations, the emphatic particle yo by itself can function as desu yo (“is/are/will be” + emph.), especially in female speech.

- 2 Tomo-chan:
Uso ja nai mon. Hora, koko ni iru ja nai.
 “But it’s not a lie. Look! He’s right here.” (PL2)

- mon is a contraction of mono (lit. “because”), which in sentences of denial like this serves mainly as emphasis.
- the second ja nai is a shortened form of ja nai (desu) ka, lit. “is it not the case that . . . ?” But the question is strictly rhetorical, and he’s actually making a fairly strong assertion.

- 3 Okido:
Ma, mate! Boku ga kiku!
 “H-hold it! I’ll ask him.” (PL2)

- mate is the abrupt command form of matsu (“wait”).

- 4 Okido:
O, omae wa, . . . / Omae wa doko kara kita n da? Oshiete kure!
 “Y-you . . . Where did you come from? Tell me!” (PL2)

Hanamura:
Hi, hie-
 “Yikes/Aye yi yi . . .” (PL2)

- asking a question with da or n da is masculine and very informal/rough. It gives the feeling that he’s demanding an answer rather than just asking a polite question.
- oshiete is the -te form of oshieru (“teach/inform”), and kure after a -te form makes an informal/abrupt request or gentle command.

- 3 Okido:
E?! Aitsu wa nan te itte-ru n da?! Kurā!
 “Huh?! What’s the little rascal saying. Come on!” (PL2)

Hanamura:
Chotto! Ranbō wa yamete yo!
 “Hey! Don’t be so rough!” (PL2)

- aitsu comes from ano yatsu (“that guy/fellow/thing”), a rather rough way of referring to

- 6 Tomo-chan:
O, ora . . .
 “I-I . . .” (PL2)

- ora is a dialect version of ore, an informal/rough, masculine word for “I/me.”

- someone. Ano normally points to something that is some distance away; in this case the “distance” is provided by the ghost’s invisibility.
- kurā is a corruption of kora, which is an interjection for scolding, used a great deal by parents and teachers with their children/students.
- chotto is literally “a little,” but it’s also used as an interjection for getting someone’s attention, like “say/hey/look here.”
- yamete is the -te form of yameru (“quit/stop”), here used as a request/demand.

- 1 Tomo-chan: (quoting the ghost)
Ora samui toko kara kita da yo.
 “I came from a cold place.” (PL2)
Daibun mae ni, anchan to issho ni kita da yo.
 “I came quite a long time ago, with Anchan.” (PL2)
- anchan is an informal (and slightly old-fashioned) equivalent of niichan/nii-san (“big/older brother”).
  - da (yo) after the plain/abrupt form of a verb is a dialect form of explanatory no da (yo).

- 2 Okido:
Wakatta yo, Hanamura.
 “I’ve figured it out, Hanamura.” (PL2)
Yūrei no shōtai wa kaichō no shin’yū, / soshite wagasha no mamori-gami!
 “The ghost is actually a close friend of Mr. Matsumura and a protective spirit for our company!” (PL2)

- Hanamura:
E? “What?” (PL2)
- kami is most commonly translated “god(s),” but it’s often better thought of as “spirits” or “powers of nature.” The use here comes close to English “guardian angel,” not in the classical Western image of “angel” but more like the one who helped Jimmy Stewart in It’s a Wonderful Life.

- 3 On book:
Yōkai Ghosts
- Okido:
Subete no shōko ga, kono Yanagita Kunio no hon no naka ni atta n da.
 “I found all the evidence in this book by Yanagita Kunio.” (PL2)
- Yanagita Kunio (1875-1962, sometimes mispronounced Yanagida) was the father of folklore studies in Japan.

- 4 Hanamura:
Yanagita Kunio?
- 5 Okido:

- ... ki ga shite naranakatta is the past form of ... ki ga shite naranai, an expression for “can’t help but feel that ...”
- dekuwashita is the past form of dekuwasu (“come across/run into unexpectedly”).

- 6 Okido:
Meiji yonjūsannen no natsu, Tōhoku no toaru shōgakkō ni arawareta, fushigi-na kodomo no hanashi da.
 “This is the story of a mysterious child who showed up at a certain North-eastern grade school in the summer of Meiji 43 [1910].” (PL2)
Sono kodomo wa minna to issho ni natte asobi tawamureta.
 “The child joined with everyone else in playing and frolicking.” (PL2)
Shikashi jinjō ichinen no chiisa-na kodomo-tachi ni shika mienakatta to iu.
 “But they say he was visible only to the smallest kids, the first graders.” (PL2)

- “After I went to see Mr. Yumioka, I couldn’t help but feel that the ghost had something to do with Mr. Matsumura’s childhood.” (PL2)
Sore de, Tōhoku chihō no kaigenshō o atsukatta hon o shiraberu uchi ni,
 “And so as I delved into books dealing with supernatural phenomena in the Northeast, kono hon ni dekuwashita no sa.
 “I came across this book.” (PL2)

- 1 Okido:
Sono fushigi-na kodomo koso, dare arō,
zashiki-warashi na no sa!
 “And who might this mysterious child be? None other than a zashiki-warashi.”
 (PL2)

Okido:
Zashiki-warashi wa Honshū hokutan ni
iki-tsuzukete kita yōkai da.
 “Zashiki-warashi are ghosts that have long lived in northern Honshū.” (PL2)

Sumitsuuta ie ni fuku o motarasu to ii, “It’s said that they bring good fortune to the houses where they take up residence,

jimoto no hitobito wa, karera o “chiisaku utsukushii kami” to yobu.
 “and the local people refer to them as ‘the little and beautiful spirits.’” (PL2)

- iki-tsuzukete kita combines the stem of the verb ikiru (“live”), the -te form of tsuzukeru (“continue”), and the past form of kuru (“come”).

- 2 Okido:
Tomo-chan ga mita kimono o kita kodomo
wa, Tōhoku-ben o shabette-ta.
 “The kimono-clad child that Tomo-chan saw was speaking Tōhoku dialect.” (PL2)

Masa ni zashiki-warashi darō.
 “Without a doubt, he must be a zashiki-
warashi.” (PL2)

- Tōhoku chihō (lit. “northeastern region”) includes Aomori, Iwate, Akita, Miyagi, Yamagata, and Fukushima prefectures in northeastern Honshū. Tōhoku-ben (lit. “northeastern dialect”) actually includes a whole family of dialects, with certain common features among them.
- shobette-(i)ta is from shaberu (“speak/talk”).

- 3 Hanamura:
Dakedo . . . sore dake ja . . .
 “But if it’s only that . . .”
 “But . . . if that’s all—” (PL2)

Okido:
Mā kike yo.
 “Please listen.”
 “Walt, hear me out.” (PL2)

- kike = abrupt command form of kiku (“listen”).

- 4 Okido:
Sono zashiki-warashi ga arawareta
shōgakkō to iu no ga . . .
 “The school where this zashiki-warashi

Rikuchū, Kamihei-gun, Dobuchi-mura no
jinjō shōgakkō datta n da yo.
 “was the grade school in the village of Dobuchi in Kamihei County in Rikuchū.” (PL2)

- 5 Hanamura:
E?! / Sono gakkō wa . . .
 “What?! That school . . .”

- 6 Hanamura:
kaichō no ita shōgakkō ne!!
 “is the grade school where Mr. Matsumura went, isn’t it?!”
 (PL2)

- 7 Okido:
Go-meitō! Tsumari kaichō wa koko de zashiki-warashi to shiriatta n da!
 “Bingo! Which is to say, Mr. Matsumura got to know/became friends with the zashiki-warashi at that school!” (PL2)

- meitō literally means “clear/definite answer,” but go-meitō, with the honorific prefix go-, is used idiomatically like “Precisely right!/Bingo!”

An Interview with Ishinomori Shōtarō

Renowned manga artist and Executive Director of the Japan
Manga Artists Association

『萬画』こそ万能のメディア

- 1 「HOTEL」の作者である石ノ森さんは高校在学中の1955年、漫画家としてデビューして以来、『サイボーグ009』『佐武と市捕物控』『仮面ライダー』『秘密戦隊ゴレンジャー』など数々のヒット作品を生みだし、日本の漫画界をリードしてきた。「HOTEL」では現代日本社会のあり方を問い、86年には単行本『マンガ日本経済入門』を発表。ベストセラーとなり、アメリカでも評判を呼んだ。それをきっかけとして情報コミック・ブームを巻き起こすなど、次々と新境地を切り開いてきた。現在『マンガ日本の歴史』で執筆中で、新たな挑戦を続けている。
- 2 日本は世界でも珍しい漫画王国となったわけですが、これほど全盛を誇るようになった原因は何だと思われませんか。
- 3 石ノ森：やはり手塚治虫という天才の登場が大きかったのではないのでしょうか。40年以上前、手塚さんはディズニーのアニメーションに影響を受けて、アップやワイドなどの映画の手法を漫画に取り入れたのです。それは当時の人々には新鮮でショッキングでした。我々はニューメディアとして手塚さんの漫画として受け入れ、そのとりこになったのです。
- 4 それまで自分の心象風景などを書いて文芸誌に投稿していた文学少年たちは一斉に漫画に流れました。今、文学界や映画界で活躍している人たちも『漫画少年』などによく投稿していたものです。

Manga, the All-Powerful Medium

- 1 Ishinomori Shōtarō, the author of "Hotel," made his debut as a manga artist in 1955 while still in high school. Since that time he has established himself as a leading figure in the Japanese manga world, producing one hit after another: "Cyborg 009," "The Detective Casebook of Sabu and Ichi," "Masked Rider," "Secret Combat Unit Gorangers," and so forth. In "Hotel," he began pondering the nature of contemporary Japanese society and how it should be, then in 1986 he published "The Manga Introduction to the Japanese Economy." It became a best seller and was greeted with enthusiasm even in the United States (where it was published in English under the title, "Japan Inc."). The work gave rise to a spate of similar "informational comics," and is an example of how Ishinomori has repeatedly pioneered new domains in his craft. He is currently at work on "The Manga History of Japan" — yet another new challenge.
- 2 Japan has become a Comic Book Kingdom nearly without peer throughout the world. Why do you think manga have come to boast such tremendous prosperity?
- 3 Ishinomori: I really think the appearance of a genius like Tezuka Osamu was the greatest factor. More than forty years ago, under the influence of Disney animation, Tezuka incorporated such cinematic techniques as close-ups and wide shots into manga. To readers of the time this was both novel and shocking. We came to perceive Tezuka's manga as an entirely new medium, and were captivated by them.
- 4 *Young literary types who until then had been shaping their imaginary landscapes into stories and sending them off to literary magazines suddenly surged over into manga. Even some of the people who are today active in literature or film used to contribute to magazines like Manga Shōnen ("Manga Boys/Youths").*

- 5 漫画という表現形態に合った人、合わなかった人、いろいろいましたが、結果として優秀な才能が漫画に集まり、そのクオリティーを高めたのではないのでしょうか。
- 6 文学が落ち込んできたのは、ほら話や波瀾万丈の物語など、ストーリーとしておもしろい部分を切り捨ててきたからなんです。そのおもしろさを漫画家が拾い上げてきたのではないかと思っています。
- 7 ただし今、活字離れといわれますが、昔もそれほど活字が読まれていたわけではなく、むしろ漫画が新しいマーケットを切り開いてきたといえるでしょう。
- 8 漫画というのは落書きの延長線であって、事実をデフォルメして表現します。誰でも気軽に描けるし、時代の息吹をすぐに伝えることのできるメディアなんです。その小回りのよさが強みかもしれません。
- 9 『HOTEL』という作品は現代の日本社会を描いているわけですが、そこに登場するホテルマンたちの仕事への打ち込みぶりも一つのデフォルメといえるわけですか。
- 10 石ノ森：外国の人が見たら、やはりワーカホリックに見えるでしょうね。でも、あの登場人物たちは日本の現状そのものです。私が見た現状、プラス私の願望が込められている漫画なのです。
- 11 ホテルというのは一つの街であり、さらにいえば日本社会です。その中で人がどう考え、どう動くか。ホテルこそ人間ドラマが無限に起こる場所だと考えたのです。
- 12 またホテルはホスピタリティ（親切、歓待）という言葉が表すように、客とホテルマンの交流の場です。交流の中で人間関係がうまくいくはずだというのが私の願望なのです。
- 13 私は従来、キャラクター本位で漫画を作ってきました。つまり初めにキャラクターを設定し、それを売り出すためにドラマを考えるのです。ところがこの作品はプラトンというホテルが主人公で、その中の登場人物が動いているうちに、一つのトータルなプラトンのキャラクターができあがってくる。そういう意味では私にとって新しい試みだったのです。
- 14 そして『HOTEL』を見た日本経済新聞から「経済を漫画で描けないか」という依頼があり、『マンガ日本経済入門』を執筆することになったのです。

- 5 There were all kinds: people who were suited to manga as a medium of expression, and people who were not, but I think the end result was that a great many superior talents flocked into manga and raised the quality standard.
- 6 The reason literature has declined so far today is that writers have been cutting out the tall tales and convoluted plots that make stories interesting. I think manga artists have picked up those interesting elements that other writers have thrown away.
- 7 Some people say we're becoming estranged from the printed word, but actually I don't think people read all that much even long ago. I'd say, rather, that manga have been opening up entirely new markets.
- 8 Manga are an extension of graffiti, and they portray reality by deforming it. They are a medium that anyone can engage in quite lightheartedly, and that can very quickly convey the essence of an age. Perhaps it's in this versatility that their strength lies.
- 9 You portray contemporary Japanese society in your series called "Hotel." Would you say the tremendous dedication the hotel staff appearing in it show toward their work is also a kind of deforming of reality?
- 10 Ishinomori: I suppose from the perspective of the overseas reader they look very much like workaholics. But those characters represent the very essence of today's Japan. "Hotel" is a series that embodies my perception of Japan's contemporary reality together with my hopes of how I wish it could be.
- 11 A hotel is a community, and you could even say it is Japanese society itself. When I started wondering, "What do the people there think? What do they do?" I realized that a hotel is a setting where countless human dramas take place.
- 12 Also, as the word "hospitality" suggests, a hotel is a place of social interaction between the staff and the guests. My hope is that the human relationships in these social interactions can always go smoothly.
- 13 Before "Hotel," I created manga that centered on specific characters. I established the characters first, and then I thought up dramatic situations that would sell those characters. But in this series, a hotel called the Platon is the main character. In the course of time, as you watch the movements of the varied ensemble of characters who appear there, everything merges into a single whole that is the Platon's "character." In that sense, it was a new undertaking for me.
- 14 Based on what they saw in "Hotel," the Nihon Keizai Shimbun [the Japanese equivalent of the Wall Street Journal] asked me, "Couldn't you use manga to illustrate principles of economics?" That's what led me to write "The Manga Introduction to the Japanese Economy."

- 15 実際はこの『漫画人』を始める際に、「マンガ日本経済入門」の英語版がアメリカで成功したということが、大きな支えとなっていたわけなんです、日本の漫画を世界に紹介することに関してはどのようにお考えですか。
- 16 石ノ森: 私の作品も海外向けに翻訳されていますが、単に翻訳ものを海外に持っていても仕方がないのではないのでしょうか。漫画は誇張されて描かれているわけですから、海外の人にそのまま受け取られても困りますし、日本の漫画の読み方というものを理解してもらう必要があると思います。
- 17 私としては日本の漫画家が海外に飛び出し、世界の舞台でオリジナルな作品を作ってほしいと思っています。もう海外で活躍する時代になったのではないのでしょうか。
- 18 ところで石ノ森さんは漫画に代わって『萬画』という考え方を提案されていますが、それに関連して今後の漫画の可能性と課題についてお聞かせください。
- 19 石ノ森: 実際は『マンガ日本経済入門』を執筆したときに、あるジレンマに陥ったのです。従来の漫画はデフォルメして表現するものだった。ところが『経済』はデフォルメするとミスリードという問題が起きてくる。創造力を使いすぎると事実でなくなるのです。
- 20 それならば、漫画という表現方法をどう活用するかということに行き着きます。こうなるともはや従来の漫画ではない。どのようなモチーフも表現できるメディアではないだろうかと思えるようになったのです。
- 21 そこであらゆる事象を表現できるメディアという意味で『萬画』と命名したのです。英語でいえば、Million Art。略してM.A., すなわち『MA』NGAという意味です。
- 22 かつて我々は小説と映画にあこがれて、その手法を漫画に生かしたいと、二次元の平面で一生懸命、勝負してきた。そして、擬声語などのさまざまな技法を作り上げてきました。
- 23 ところが今や小説家や映画人が逆に漫画をうらやましいというようになった。漫画で育ったアーティストたちが漫画からいろいろな要素を取り込む逆流が起こり始めたのです。
- 15 Actually, back when we were getting started with Mangajin, we took great heart in the success of the English version of "The Manga Introduction to the Japanese Economy" (under the title "Japan Inc.") in the United States. What are your thoughts on making Japanese manga available to a world audience?
- 16 Ishinomori: Some of my work has been translated for readers abroad, but I wonder whether it's meaningful to just ship such translated versions overseas. Manga are drawn with all kinds of exaggerations, so I wouldn't want readers from other countries to take them too literally. I think they first need to understand how Japanese comics should be read.
- 17 From my point of view, I'd like to see Japanese manga artists go overseas themselves and create original works that use the world as their stage. It seems to me we've entered an age when Japanese manga artists can be active internationally.
- 18 You've suggested that we should think of manga as being 萬画 instead of 漫画. In this connection, could you tell us your view of the prospects and challenges that manga will face in the future?
- 19 Ishinomori: Writing "The Manga Introduction to the Japanese Economy" presented me with a certain dilemma. Manga had traditionally gained their effect by deforming reality. But if I "deformed" my treatment of economics, I would end up misleading readers. If I used too much creativity, I would be departing from the truth.
- 20 It came down to a question of how to utilize the medium of manga. At that point, it was no longer a traditional manga. I began to think that maybe manga could be used to present any subject at all.
- 21 That's when I dubbed them 萬画, meaning a medium with the power to portray any and all phenomena. [Ed. Note: 萬 is the old form of 万 (read man, ban, or yorozu depending on the context), literally meaning "ten thousand" but in many expressions implying "myriad/all." By contrast, the original meaning of 漫画 was "aimless/wild/playful drawings."] In English it could be called "Million Art." Abbreviate it as M.A., and you have "MA"nga.
- 22 In the past we manga artists so worshiped novels and movies that we vied intently to adapt techniques from them into the flat, two-dimensions of our manga. We developed a wide variety of devices such as the use of mimetic words.
- 23 But now it's the novelists and filmmakers who are saying they envy manga. Artists who grew up on manga have given rise to a reverse flow to incorporate various elements of manga into other media.

HOTEL

Part II

HOTEL is set in the fictional 一流 (ichi-ryū, "first class") Tokyo hotel プラトン (Puraton, "Platon"), and revolves around the hotel staff (as regular characters) and the guests.

The main character in this particular story is Dr. Jinbo, a promising physician who left the staff of a prestigious university hospital to take charge of the clinic at the Platon. She made that career change partly because she had doubts about the way patients are treated in a big hospital—at the hotel she can take a more personal, human approach.

Some of Dr. Jinbo's former associates come to the Platon for a medical conference. They think her talents are being wasted at the hotel clinic, and remind her of how much she could accomplish at the university hospital. Her former mentor, Dr. Okabe, agrees. Hoping to lure her back, he arranges a meeting the next afternoon so he can introduce her to a famous internist. Adding to her confusion is an encounter with her old med school classmate Shibata, now an associate professor. He reveals that he had planned to propose to her shortly before she left the university hospital. But when a guest visits the clinic in Dr. Jinbo's absence, Dr. Shibata treats him in a callous manner, and Jinbo is reminded of why she left the university in the first place.

Meanwhile, the staff of the Platon is alarmed at the prospect of losing Dr. Jinbo. When they see Dr. Shibata's "bedside manner" they appreciate even more the way Dr. Jinbo treats her patients with the courtesy hotel guests expect, making them as comfortable as possible while they're sick and away from home.

Dr. Okabe: 柴田くん、神保くん は どうした んだ?
Shibata-kun, Jinbo-kun wa dō shita n da?
 (name-hon.) (name-hon.) as-for what/how did (explan.-?)
“Shibata, what’s happened to Jinbo?” (PL2)

せっかく 加賀教授 が 会ってくださる という のに。
Sekkaku Kaga Kyōju ga atte kudasaru to iu no ni.
 specially/kindly (name-title) (subj.) meet/see (favor) (quote) even though “Even though Professor Kaga has kindly said he would see her, (she’s not here).”
“Professor Kaga has kindly made time to see her, but she’s not here.” (PL2)

Dr. Shibata: さっき 電話しました から、もう そろそろ。
Sakki denwa shimashita kara, mō sorosoro.
 a while ago telephoned/called so now by and by/soon
“I called her a while ago, so (I expect she’ll be arriving) any minute now.” (PL3)

- -kun is a mostly masculine equivalent of -san (“Mr./Ms.”). Among peers it is generally used only with males, but a superior may address/refer to either male or female subordinates with -kun. Males may also occasionally address/refer to a female peer with -kun.
- dō shita (lit. “did what/how?”) is an idiom that asks for an explanation of something that seems out of the ordinary: “what happened?/what’s wrong?/what’s going on?” Asking a question with n da is masculine.
- sekkaku indicates that someone has gone to a lot of trouble for something. It’s often followed later in the sentence with no ni (“even though”) to express frustration that “even though” they went to a lot of trouble (e.g., they have made a special opportunity available) something else prevents the attainment of a desired result.
- atte is the -te form of au (“meet/see”), and kudasaru is a polite equivalent of kureru (“give [to me]”). Kureru or kudasaru after the -te form of a verb means someone is doing the action as a favor to the speaker or someone close to him/her. Kudasaru is used when the person doing the action is of higher status than the person receiving the favor.
- the quotative phrase . . . to iu no ni here is literally like saying “even though it is the case/situation that . . .”

2

Dr. Okabe: まったく 何 をやっているんだ?
Mattaku nani o yatte-iru n da?
 (exclam.) what (obj.) is doing
“Geez! What could she be doing?” (PL2)

もう 一度 電話したまえ。
Mō ichido denwa shitamae.
 more once telephone/call
“Call her again.” (PL2)

- mattaku (lit. “completely/entirely”), is often used as an exclamation of exasperation.
- yatte is the -te form of yaru, an informal word for “do.” Yatte-iru = “is doing.”
- mō before a number means that many “more,” and -do is the counter suffix for “times/occasions.”
- -tamae makes a strong/authoritarian command, so denwa shitamae is a command form of denwa suru.

3

Akagawa: はい、わかりました。伝えます。
Hai, wakarimashita. Tsutaemasu.
 yes/okay understood will convey/tell
“Yes sir, I understand. I’ll give her the message.” (PL3)

- wakarimashita is the PL3 form of wakatta, the past of wakaru. Since wakaru means “come to know/understand,” its past form is often equivalent to English “understand” rather than “understood.”
- tsutaemasu is the PL3 form of tsutaeru (“convey a message”).

4

Akagawa: また 柴田先生 からです。すぐに 来てくれ と。
Mata Shibata Sensei kara desu. Sugu ni kite kure to.
 again (name-title) from is immediately come (please) (quote).
“It’s from Dr. Shibata again. He says to come right away.” (PL3)

Dr. Jinbo: “こんな 患者 . . .”
“Konna kanja . . .”
 this kind of patient(s)
“This kind of patient . . .”

- kite is the -te form of kuru (“come”). Kure after the -te form of a verb makes an informal/abrupt request or relatively gentle command, “(do it), please/(do it), will you?” Requesting/commanding with -te kure is masculine; females would use just the -te form by itself or add an honorific o- to make it -te o-kure.
- the quotative to implies something like to itte-imasu (“is saying/says . . .”).
- in the last installment, Dr. Shibata told Dr. Jinbo that she was wasting her talents working in a hotel clinic. Here, she is recalling his injunction that “You must not go on doing this kind of treatment for this kind of patient at this kind of place.”

(name-hon.)                  “This is the situation now, Akagawa.” → “You can see the situation, Akagawa.” (PL2) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• na no (desu) is the form explanatory no (desu) takes after nouns. New Resource

Those interested in Japanese computing should get their hands on Understanding Japanese Information Processing by Ken Lunde, published by O’Reilly & Associates, Inc. While not, strictly speaking, the first book to be published about the inner workings of Japanese computers, this book is an important reference. It includes excellent glossaries and coding references, as well as character tables, sources of more information, and explanations of various areas of Japanese computing.

The book covers Japanese input, output, encoding, and data processing well. While reading the chapter on Japanese output, it is important to remember that the author is an employee of Adobe Systems. This offers him excellent insight and understanding of Japanese fonts, but may influence his conclusions somewhat.

I recommend Understanding Japanese Information Processing to anyone interested in Japanese computing.

Douglas Horn is a free-lance writer and computer consultant living in Seattle, Washington.

Dr. Shibata: ホテルなんて 軽治療 の患者 だけ だし
Hoteru nante keichiryō no kanja dake da shi hotel (belittle) light treatment (=) patients only is/are and “A hotel only has patients with minor problems, and 少し くらい 待たせたって 支障 は ない だろう が!

sukoshi kurai matasetatte shishō wa nai darō ga!
 a little just/only even if make wait impediment/difficulty as-for not exist/occur probably (emph.)
“surely there’d be no harm in asking them to wait just a little.” (PL2)

Akagawa: ホテルの 治療 は 病院 の 治療 と は 違います!
Hoteru no chiryō wa byōin no chiryō to wa chigaimasu!
 hotel at treatment as-for hospital at treatment from as-for is different “Medical care at a hotel is different from medical care at a hospital!” (PL3)

- nante is a colloquial quotative form that belittles the preceding as trifling/insignificant/unworthy.
- keichiryō no kanja implies “patients who require only light treatment” → “patients with only minor problems.”
- shi following da/desu or a verb is a somewhat emphatic “and” or “and besides” for connecting two clauses.
- kurai (or gurai) literally means “about/approximately,” but it can be used idiomatically to downplay the significance of the thing/amount mentioned just before it, so sukoshi kurai = “just a little.”
- matasetatte is a colloquial equivalent of matasete mo, a conditional (“even if”) form of mataseru (“make wait”), from matsu (“wait”).
- ga after the conjectural darō provides emphasis like “surely must (be) . . .” or “surely must not (be) . . .”

10

Dr. Shibata: ホテルマンの 君 など に / 患者 の 事 など わかる のかね?
Hoteru-man no kimi nado ni / kanja no koto nado wakaru no ka ne?
 hotelman (=) you the likes of to patients's thing/situation things like can/know understand (explan.-?)
“Can/does a hotel man like you understand the patients' situations?”
“How could a hotelman like you possibly know anything about patients?” (PL2)

- asking a question with ka ne is generally reserved for speaking to someone of lower status.

11

Akagawa: わかりません。 / ですが、神保先生 が 治療 している の は
Wakarimasen. / Desu ga, Jinbo Sensei ga chiryō shite-iru no wa 患者 ではなく 人間 なんです!

kanja de wa naku ningen na n desu!
 patients are not-but human beings (explan.) are “(No,) I don't know (about patients). But what Dr. Jinbo is treating are not patients but human beings.” (PL3)

- desu ga (lit. “it is so, but” → “but”) sounds more formal than dakeda.
- no is a “nominalizer,” which turns what comes before it into a noun. Here you can think of it as standing in for hito (“person/people”): “the people Dr. Jinbo is treating/treats.”
- de wa naku is a continuing form of de wa nai, “is/are not.”

12

Dr. Shibata: 人間?!
Ningen?! human beings
“Human beings?!” (PL2)

Akagawa: 病院 には 病気 になった 人 が 治療 してもら っ た ため に 来 ます。
Byōin ni wa byōki ni natta hito ga chiryō shite morau tame ni kimasu.
 hospital to/at as-for sick became people (subj.) receive treatment for purpose of come
“At a hospital, people who have become sick come to be treated (for their illness).” (PL3)

Akagawa: ですから 医者 は 患者 と して だけ 扱 えば いい かも し れ ませ ん。
Desu kara isha wa kanja to shite dake atsukaeba ii kamo shiremasen.
 is so because doctors as-for patients as only if treat/handle is good/fine maybe
“So it may be fine for doctors to treat them only as patients.” (PL3)

- . . . ni natta is the plain/abrupt past form of . . . ni naru (“become . . .”). Byōki ni natta is a complete thought/sentence (“[they] became sick”) modifying hito (“person/people”).
- morau (“receive”) after the -te form of a verb implies the subject “receives” the action, or has the action done for him/her.
- desu kara is a more formal equivalent of da kara, “because it is so/therefore.”
- atsukaeba is a conditional “if” form of atsukau (“treat/handle/deal with”). The verb ending -ba ii makes an expression meaning “it is enough/adequate/fine if . . .”
- kamo shiremasen is the PL3 form of kamo shirenai (“might be/may possibly be”), so atsukaeba ii kamo shiremasen = “it may be adequate if (he) treats/handles . . .”

Dr. Okabe: 柴田くん、この人の言ってる事は本当だよ。

“Shibata, what this man says is true.” (PL2)

 person/people's illness (obj.) fix/cure for purpose of authority as-for not need
“You don't need authority to treat someone's illness.” (PL2)

- itte-ru is a contraction of itte-iru (“is saying”), from iu (“say”). Kono hito no itte-ru is a complete thought/sentence modifying koto (“thing”). In modifying clauses, the subject marker ga often changes to no.
- iran is a contraction of iranai, the negative form of iru (“need”).

18

Dr. Okabe: 立派な病院でなくてもよい。
Rippa-na byōin de nakutemo yoi.

“It doesn't have to be (in) a fancy hospital.” (PL2)

 私の教え子として立派に巣立ったようだね。 watashi no oshiego to shite rippa-ni sudatta yō da ne.
 my student/disciple as admirably/worthily left the nest it seems (colloq.)

“I seems that Jinbo, exactly as expected, has admirably left the nest as one of my students.”
“It would appear Jinbo has lived up to my expectations of her as my student and most worthily taken wing on her own.” (PL2)

- rippa-na is an adjective for “imposing/grand/admirable/worthy” and rippa-ni is its adverb form.
- ... de nakutemo yoi is a conditional form of de nai (“is not”) plus the adjective ii/yoi (“is good/fine/okay”), so the phrase literally means “it's okay even if it's not ...” → “it doesn't need to be ...”
- kitai refers to “hopes/expectations,” in this case the hopes/expectations Dr. Okabe had for Dr. Jinbo.
- oshiego, from oshieru (“teach”) and ko (“child”) is a term used by teachers and professors for somewhat endearingly referring to their “students/academic protégés.”
- sudatta is the past form of sudatsu, “depart the nest,” an expression for “becoming independent/going out on one's own.”
- yō da after a verb means “it seems/appears” the action was done or will be done.

19

Dr. Okabe: ここには彼女を信頼している患者や仲間が大勢いる。
Koko ni wa kanojo o shinrai shite-iru kanja ya nakama ga ōzei iru.

“She has a lot of patients and colleagues who have faith in her here.” (PL2)

私は病院だけでなくホテルにも優秀な医者が
Watashi wa byōin dake de naku hoteru ni mo yūshū-na isha ga
 I/me as-for hospital(s) not only hotel(s) by also superior doctors (subj.)

必要だという事を教えられたよ!
hitsuyō da to iu koto o oshierareta yo!
 is/are needed (quote) thing (obj.) was taught (emph.)

“She has taught me that superior doctors are needed not only in hospitals but also in hotels.” (PL2)

Kurata: ありがとうございます!!
Arigatō gozaimashita!!
“Thank you very much.” (PL4)

- shinrai is a noun for “trust” and shinrai shite-iru is from shinrai suru, its verb form. Kanojo o shinrai shite-iru is a complete thought/sentence (“[they] trust her”) modifying kanja ya nakama (“patients and colleagues”).
- ya is used to mean “and” between two or more items in a list, generally implying that the list is not necessarily complete.
- ... dake de naku, usually followed later in the sentence by mo (or some equivalent), is an expression for “not only ... but also ...”
- the quotative phrase ... to iu koto essentially makes the complete thought/sentence byōin dake de naku hoteru ni mo yūshū-na isha ga hitsuyō da (“not only in hospitals but in hotels also superior doctors are needed”) into a noun, and o marks it as the direct object of oshierareta.
- oshierareta is the past form of oshierareru, the passive form of oshieru (“teach”), so Watashi wa ... o oshierareta is literally “I was taught ...” In this case it could be taken to mean simply “I learned ...” or to mean “She taught me ...”

Akagawa: 神保先生、岡部先生 が 先生 によろしくって...

Jinbo Sensei, Okabe Sensei ga sensei ni yoroshiku te...

(name-hon.) (name-hon.) (subj.) doctor/you to regards (quote)

"Dr. Jinbo, Dr. Okabe asked me to give you his regards." (PL2; probably PL3 implied)

- te is a colloquial equivalent of to, which marks yoroshiku as a quote — i.e., he is quoting Dr. Okabe's yoroshiku. Often, yoroshiku is short for yoroshiku onegai shimasu, a phrase used when meeting someone for the first time and typically translated "I'm pleased to meet you." But that's obviously not the situation here. This yoroshiku is short for yoroshiku itte kudasai ("please say yoroshiku for me"), yoroshiku tsutaete kudasai ("please convey/relay the message yoroshiku for me"), or another similar phrase Dr. Okabe would have spoken, essentially meaning "please give my (best/kind/affectionate) regards/please remember me (to Dr. Jinbo)".

石ノ森インタビュー • Ishinomori Interview

24 現在の若い漫画家たちは我々の世代とは違って、先輩の漫画から勉強しています。それなりに早く上達するのですが、やはり深みを感じることはできません。漫画家が伸びるために同じ漫画家だけから学ぶのではなく、他のジャンルと競争して、そこから吸収していく姿勢が必要だと思っております。

25 漫画は枠のないメディアです。今後はますますハイテク技術と結びついてマルチメディア化するでしょう。そして漫画家自身も街づくりや都市づくりに参加するようなマルチ化、立体化を目指すべきです。野放図な漫画家のイメージーションを生かせるような時代がこれからやってくるだろうと思っております。

26 石ノ森さんの今後の新作の予定はいかがですか。

27 石ノ森: 新作のアイデアは山ほどあるんですが、漫画は肉体労働ですからね、なかなか形にならないものです。漫画の他には映画のシナリオも書いていますし、小説のテーマも暖めているところなんです。現在の月300ページのペースを半分以上落とさないと難しいでしょうね。まあ、焦らずゆっくりやるつもりですよ。

24 Today's young manga artists, unlike my own generation, learned from the manga of the artists who went before them. I suppose it allowed them to acquire skills that much more quickly, but when all is said and done, I can't sense any real depth in their work. For manga artists to grow, it's not enough for them to study the work of other manga artists. I think it's important to have the attitude of being in competition with other genres and absorbing from those genres.

25 Manga are a medium without bounds. I expect they will grow increasingly high-tech and multi-media oriented in the future. The artists themselves need to look toward expanding and diversifying their range of activities by participating in things like the building of urban culture and their communities. I think an age is coming when the unbridled imaginations of manga artists can really come alive.

26 What plans do you have for new projects?

27 Ishinomori: I have mountains of ideas for new series, but drawing manga is physical labor, and they don't really make it into concrete shape on paper. Besides manga, I'm writing a screenplay, and I even have the plot for a novel warming on the back burner, but unless I can drop my current pace of 300 pages a month by more than half, I don't know how I can get it written. I intend to take it at an easy pace without rushing things.

The Vocabulary Summary is taken from material appearing in this issue of MANGAJIN. It's not always possible to give the complete range of meanings for a word in this limited space, so our "definitions" are based on the usage of the word in a particular story.

20-meter-wide screen rises above the pool for a knock-out show of sound, light and water. Add Christmas to this show and the result is a lot of entertainment for a reasonable sum of money. The biggest of these indoor ocean parks, down south in Miyazaki, will celebrate its first Christmas with a Santa-in-the-tropics theme.

As interest in big-ticket Christmas themes has declined, consumers are spending more for basic elements such as cards and flowers. As a result, Japan may now have the most elaborate Christmas cards in the world. They talk, they sing, they play music—powered by tiny electronic devices so slim that they can be easily mailed. Other Christmas cards incorporate a present: calendars, the old standbys, have been replaced by telephone cards and book certificates. For that someone special, a Christmas card may contain a compact disc.

Times, indeed, have changed, if someone special gets a compact disc instead of a dinner show. And for those couples who want a romantic Christmas Eve in 1993, the newest “in” thing to do this year is drive at night across the recently opened Rainbow Bridge over Tokyo Harbor and look at the city lights across the water.

How about the kids? Seventy percent of Japanese children between the ages of six and ten say that they believe in Santa Claus. Small wonder, for in Japan, Santa Claus is not likely to let them down.

The array of toys at stores such as Kiddyland is mindboggling, as are some of the prices. Sophisticated electronic gadgetry runs into sums too steep for a child’s wallet. Doting grandparents, their own childhood marred by wartime deprivation, are heavy spenders. These grandparents are likely to have come from large families—six, eight, or even ten children—and having so few grandchildren makes them more likely to up the amount spent per child.

Two years ago, when the first new baby in a generation was born into the Imperial family just before the onset of the Christmas season, the toy industry joyfully started promoting what they hoped would become a new tradition: Baby’s First Christmas. They introduced stuffed animals that play Christmas carols, Christmas tree ornaments depicting a tiny doll in a cradle, and even teddy bears emblazoned with the logo “Baby’s First Christmas.”

Christmas celebrations in Japan will no doubt continue to evolve, but only time will tell if the excesses of the late 1980s will ever again be part of a Japanese Kurisumasu.

It's Finally Here!

The first 24 'Basic Japanese Lessons' from Mangajin, compiled in book form.

MANGAJIN's
BASIC JAPANESE
through comics

Basic Japanese Through Comics is the ideal supplement to learning Japanese from textbooks. The book uses lifelike situations from real manga to explain linguistic and cultural points quickly and memorably. Each chapter one specific concept of basic Japanese—a phrase, word, or hard-to-grasp idiom—is carefully examined and explained. The lessons cover a wide array of Japanese expression and illustrate usage and cultural context, providing insights into not only the language, but the way the Japanese behave, think and see the world as well.

“...a delightful volume that both educates and entertains. This is 'real' Japanese as spoken by the natives...I highly recommend this book to those who wish to study real 'live' Japanese in its genuine socio-linguistic context.”
• Glen Fukushima, Director, AT&T Japan, and former U.S. trade negotiator

“Basic Japanese through comics presents the reader with enjoyable material as well as valuable information on Japanese language and culture. I recommend it highly as a reference book for learners of Japanese.”
• Professor Akira Miura, U. of Wisconsin, and author of Japanese Words and Their Uses

Learn essential expressions and get a slice-of-life look into Japanese society at the same time!

Each chapter gives you an average of six pages of illustrations from manga covering:
