Mangajin is a made-up word combining manga ("comics/cartoons") and jin ("person/people"). It sounds almost like the English word "magazine" as rendered in Japanese—magajin. All of the Japanese manga in Mangajin were created in Japan, by Japanese cartoonists, for Japanese readers.

Publisher's Note

We had originally scheduled this issue for summer, the Japanese season for ghosts and ghost stories, but in the end we decided to follow the American tradition, and moved it to the fall, closer to Halloween. I must say that autumn, when the leaves start to turn and the nights become chilly, seems like perfect ghost weather to me, but there is a logic to the Japanese tradition as well. One of my first Japanese teachers explained to me that telling ghost stories was a good way to cool off in the muggy Tokyo summer (a tradition established, no doubt, before Japanese consumer electronic manufacturers made air conditioning accessible to all). Even though the seasonal perception is different, it's somewhat reassuring to think that the chilling effect of ghost stories on the human body is considered the same in both cultures.

By the way, Tim Screech is the real name of the writer of the feature story. Screech is a professor of art history at the University of London.

Speaking of tradition: In keeping with my history of shameless use of this space for commercial purposes, I would like to call your attention to our help wanted classified ad on page 95. We are looking for a few good men and women to help us market Mangajin on college and high school campuses. It's a chance to become part of the Mangajin team, champion a worthy cause, and earn some money to support your sushi habit. Just call or fax Kathy or Chadd at the number on the left and they will fill you in on the details.

Japan And The Art Of Landing Feet First.

The Daruma Doll is a Japanese good luck symbol, bottom-weighted to always land feet first. To make a wish you peel off one of the eyes. When the wish comes true you paint the other eye. This is the non-business side of Japan you need to know in order to understand its business side. All the books you need to fully know the real Japan are now at KINOKUNIYA (Kinoko-kunio-ya!)—in both English and Japanese.

Changing Its Stripes

My local booksellers, the Pacific Stars and Stripes, recently changed hands and dropped Mangajin from its stock, ending with the May 1994 issue. Good grief! Out here in Japan, we need Mangajin as much as anybody, right?

K.P. QUATTLANDER
APO, Japan

You are a victim of a recent change in the distribution of periodicals to military outlets. We are now in the final stages of negotiating an agreement with the new distributors and expect to be back in your local bookstore by the end of the year. Still, we encourage you to express your dissatisfaction to the store manager or anyone else who happens to be standing nearby.

Language questions

My first question involves the use of the small tsu as an exclamation point. Could you say something about it?

My second question concerns Mangajin No. 33, page 26, "Calvin and Hobbes." In frame three, Calvin says, "Ochitsuki na yo." In my dictionary, under the listing for na, there are three listings for na, but none of them seems even vaguely appropriate here. Could you please elaborate on this usage?

Finally, in frame two of the same manga, Susie says, "Watashi no o-bentō . . ." Isn't it improper to refer to anything belonging to oneself with the honorific "o-?"

EARL J. RYAN
Corona, CA

Mangajin Translation Editor Wayne Lammers responds: In our Punctuation Notes (which have not recently appeared in Mangajin due to lack of space), we indicate that "In written Japanese, a small tsu (つ or っ) is sometimes placed at the end of a word to show that it is cut off sharply. We usually indicate this with an exclamation mark in English." The small tsu is not really equivalent to an exclamation mark, but since it's often used to indicate that a syllable is said in a sharp/crisp manner, whether from joy/wonder or from frustration/anger, it can have the same effect as an exclamation mark. (See pages 68-69 and 72-73 in this issue for examples of this usage). If you understand how the small tsu indicates that your vocal cords are supposed to momentarily cut off your voice before you sound the next syllable (as in words like matte, or sukkiri), you can see that it makes sense to use the small tsu to indicate the crisply cut ending of an exclamation.

Ochitsukina is a colloquial contraction of ochitsukinasai, a relatively gentle command form of ochitsuku ("calm down/relax"). To make this command form, you add -na or -nasai to the -masu stem of the verb.

Oh, the joys of o-! You're right about the general rule, but there are lots of exceptions and you essentially have to learn them one by one. A few words always require o-: the informal word for "stomach/tummy" is always onaka no matter whose onaka you are talking about. Other words tend usually to get o- regardless of whose they are, though they can also occur without: o-cha ("tea"), o-kane ("money"), o-furo ("bath"), and o-kashi ("sweets/junk food"), to list just a few. O-bentō ("a

Correction

We inadvertently changed the spelling of the magazine title Garo in our introduction to the manga story "Maboroshi no Futsū Shōjo," appearing in Mangajin No. 38. Special apologies to writer Frederik Schodt, who had spelled the name correctly in his draft.

Apology

Mangajin would like to apologize to subscribers and customers who may have experienced delays in receiving their merchandise or received renewal notices after having renewed due to difficulties we have had with our new computer database system. We hope to have all the problems ironed out soon.

The naked truth

I am currently an assistant language teacher on the JET Program in Nagasaki Prefecture. Remembering the other teachers' names has been a difficult task. One evening after having had dinner with a few teachers, I asked, "Is Hadaka-sensei coming here later?" The teacher I was speaking to began to laugh and corrected me, "It's Hidaka-sensei!" I soon realized that "hadaka" means naked, so I had said, "Is 'Naked-teacher' coming here later?"

Prayer for relief

When I was studying Japanese in Osaka, I had become a fairly good speaker of Japanese, but was told my accent caused me to be misunderstood.

One night I found myself walking around in an unfamiliar part of town. In desperate need of a restroom, I headed for the nearest subway station, where it is usually possible to find one. I asked the fellow in the ticket booth, "Kono chikaku ni o-terai ga aru deshō ka?" ("Is there a bathroom near here?") and he asked me if it mattered which one. I was surprised and told him no. He pulled out a map and informed me that there was one directly outside the opposite exit of the station. I thought this was strange, but thanked him, and rushed to get there. What I found was a very small Buddhist altar with incense burning and a woman praying. I guess my accent made my request sound like "Chikaku ni o-tera ga aru deshō ka?" or "Is there a temple nearby?"

輪になるワニ Wa ni Naru Wani A Circling Alligator

Anybody who has ever wrestled with a tight-fitting lid on a jar will appreciate the properties of this strangely smirking alligator available from Tōkyū Hands (東急ハンズ) Department Stores. As the illustration shows, when wrapped in a circle around the lid, the alligator gives you the grip you need to get the job done.

Its circling abilities have won this jar-opening reptile its clever name: Wa ni naru wani. Wani (鰐, but written here in katakana) means “alligator,” while wa (輪) means “circle,” so Wa ni naru wani means “alligator that becomes a circle.” The poetic quality is somewhat lost in the translation, but you get the point.

「お持ちカエル」現わる “Omochi Kaeru” Arawaru The Debut of “Carry-Out Frog”

Mister Donut coffee shops, a ubiquitous presence in Japan, launched a carry-out campaign using a cute mascot with a clever name. Omochi kaeri (お持ち帰り) is the Japanese expression for “carry-out,” from the verb mochikaeru, literally “carry and go home.” Kaeru also means “frog” (when written with the kanji 蛙): hence the mascot of the campaign, “Carry-Out Frog.” Here kaeru is written in katakana to emphasize the double meaning.

Arawaru is a version of the verb arawareru (“appear”) used to mean “the appearance of” → “debut.”

The “Iridescence”

(Artist) 針 すなお
Hari Sunao (a pen name)

- sutta-monda (搦った揉んだ) combines the past forms of “rub” (擦る, suru) and “massage/knead” or “debate” (揉む, momu) to make a noun meaning “argument/bickering/wrangling/dispute.” The phrase sutta monda ga arimashita was made famous by actress Miyazawa Rie in a juice commercial.
- tamamushi (玉虫, literally “jewel bug”) is a buprestid, or a “jewel beetle,” so called because it changes colors like a jewel. The word tamamushi-iro (玉虫色), literally “jewel bug-color,” means “iridescent/shimmering”
- gō (号) refers to the name of a vessel—in this case, the jewel beetle plane.

Yet another round of trade talks between the US and Japan took place in Washington over the weekend of October 1, with mixed results. While the parties managed to conclude four specific agreements, and to put off imposition of sanctions by the US under the Super-301 trade-law provision, they again failed to reach accord on automobiles and auto parts, the most crucial and sensitive areas of US-Japan trade.

On the particularly sticky issue of “objective standards” to measure Japan’s progress in opening up its markets, a compromise was finally reached after a grueling all-night debate. Judging from newspaper accounts in both countries, however, the significance of the compromise is not entirely clear. According to The Wall Street Journal, “the Japanese essentially caved in”; according to the Asahi Shinbun, the two parties “managed to come to agreement using iridescent words” (玉虫色の表現で合意にこぎつけた, tamamushi-iro no hyōgen de gōi ni kogitsuketa).

The tamamushi-iro gō featured in this October 3 cartoon is a play on the phrase tamamushi-iro gōi, or “iridescent [jewel beetle-color] agreement.” A jewel beetle (tamamushi) changes color depending on the angle from which it is viewed—very much like the agreements that the US and Japan have become notorious for. More than once, the two nations have come together to discuss trade, supposedly reached a number of decisions, and then gone their separate ways with different interpretations of what was agreed to during the talks. While some argue that an “iridescent agreement” is preferable to no agreement at all, others see the ultimate conflict in interpretation as adding to the already acute tension between the two nations.

In the cartoon, US Trade Representative Mickey Kantor is smiling as he waves goodbye to Japanese Trade Minister Hashimoto Ryūtarō (on the left) and Foreign Minister Kōno Yōhei. The question is how long his smile will last, for the two Japanese officials are flying away in a jewel beetle plane, and things may look very different once they touch ground in Japan.

GHOSTS

by Tim Screech

The Japanese world of the supernatural comprises a dizzying array of characters, from the humorously bizarre to the downright terrifying. In the 18th century, Toriyama Sekien attempted to categorize the many different types of ghostly beings that inhabit the Japanese landscape, its heavens and its hells; the results of his efforts filled four huge volumes. Here, Tim Screech takes us on a slightly more abbreviated tour.

Obake, the Japanese “ghost,” is exactly what its name suggests: o is an honorific prefix, while bake is a noun from bakeru (化ける), the verb meaning “undergo change.” Japanese ghosts, then, are essentially transformations. They are one sort of thing that mutates into another, one phenomenon that experiences shift and alteration, one meaning that becomes unstuck and twisted into something else. Obake undermine the certainties of life as we usually understand it.

The Japanese ghost is a thing of summer. There are none of the scary tales told around a winter fire—flames spitting and logs crackling, as shadows deepen and listeners become too afraid to go to bed. Myths about Japanese ghosts do not talk of the ghoul on the frozen staircase, the skeleton in the musty closet, or the drafty bell-tower, but of the tangled bed-clothes or the broken fan. The classic type are spawned from steamy weather—squeezed out, as if in some fetid moment, from other things.

The materials that breed obake can be many, and often routine, as if it is precisely the near-at-hand object that is the most susceptible to transformation. A discarded umbrella may enter the world of the strange as an umbrella obake—

GHOSTLY TERMS

Obake (お化け)/Bakemono (化け物)

Literally, "transforming thing." Refers to any type of preternatural being. Comprises yōkai and yūrei, and can also be used more generally to refer to anything that is weird or grotesque.

Yōkai (妖怪)

Literally, "bewitching apparition." Encompasses a wide spectrum of ghouls, goblins and monsters—some frightening, some amusing, and many bizarre. Yōkai usually appear at dawn or dusk.

Yūrei (幽霊)

Literally, "dim/hazy/faint spirit." Spirits of the dead who remain among the living for a specific purpose, usually to seek vengeance. Yūrei generally appear between 2 and 3 AM.

Oni (鬼)

"Demons" or "ogres." Ferocious creatures with horns and fangs that are best known for manning the gates of the various Buddhist hells and performing some of the tortures that take place in them.

SOME WELL-KNOWN YŌKAI

Tengu (天狗): A powerful mountain goblin, originally portrayed with a long beak and wings but gradually becoming more human-like, with a long nose instead of a beak. Tengu can assume various forms and can be kind protectors or cruel tricksters, carrying off small children, starting fires, and even inciting wars.

Kappa (河童): A scaly river monster with a beak-like snout and a water-filled dish on its head that gives it supernatural powers. Kappa are dangerous pranksters, known for dragging people into the water and then pulling their intestines out through their anuses. Kappa love cucumbers and sumo wrestling—but if you are challenged to a bout, and value your life, you had best let the kappa win.

Rokurokubi (ろくろ首):

A female monster with an extremely flexible neck. At day they are indistinguishable from normal women, but after night-fell rokurokubi stretch their necks out to any length in search of prey. According to one theory, they are seeking out men in order to suck the life energy out of them.

ATTRIBUTES OF YŪREI

According to Shintō beliefs, all people are endowed with a spirit or a soul, called reikon (霊魂). When a person dies, the reikon leaves the body and joins the souls of its ancestors, provided the correct funeral and post-funeral rites have been performed. Ancestral souls are a comforting presence; they are believed to protect the family, and are welcomed back to the home every summer during the obon festival.

However, when a person dies in an unexpected manner or with an excess of emotion, or when he or she hasn't been given an appropriate funeral, the reikon may become a yūrei, a tormented ghost who remains among the living in order to seek revenge or take care of unfinished business.

In the beginning, yūrei were visually indistinguishable from their original human selves. Then, in the late 17th century, as kaidan (怪談, "ghost stories") became increasingly popular in literature and in the theater, yūrei began to acquire certain attributes which continue to characterize them today. It is believed that the main purpose of these attributes was to make it easier to distinguish yūrei in art and on the stage from ordinary, living characters.

Most of the yūrei's characteristics derive from Edo-period funeral rituals. For example, they appear in white, the color in which people were buried at that time—either in white katabira (帷子, a plain, unlined kimono) or in kyōkatabira (経帷子, a white katabira inscribed with Buddhist sutras). Yūrei also appear with a white triangular piece of paper or cloth on their forehead—usually tied around the head with string—called hitaikakushi (額隠し, lit. "forehead cover"). These were originally conceived to protect the newly dead from evil spirits, but eventually became just part of the ritual ornamentation of Buddhist funerals.

Yūrei began to appear without legs in the mid-18th century, as part of the movement toward increasingly lurid and gruesome kaidan. Some attribute this new characteristic to Maruyama Ōkyo (丸山応挙) a well-known artist of the time. In the theater, actors portraying yūrei wore long kimono to cover their legs, and were often hung by a hidden rope to appear more yūrei-like. The outstretched arms and dangling hands typical of yūrei also arose as a convention of the theater.

steam seeming to rise oddly from the waxed-paper brim and forming a leering face. There is also the lamp (提灯, chōchin) obake that grows out of a normally swinging lantern, investing its approachable, dangling form with weird life, as the shade and candle inside bounce angrily against the blasts of a gale.

Obake can possess an element of cuteness as well; indeed, they sometimes evoke more amusement than fear. Children make drawings of umbrellas with grinning faces, and may giggle at the image of a ripped and gaping lantern. Most of the time such things are perfectly harmless. But therein also lies their danger—no one can ever be quite certain when the transformations will take place.

A significant number of obake are explicitly related to fire. In many societies, fire is seen as the chief helper of working people, but also as their deadliest menace, and so fire is often an indication of strange forces in the offing.

A face suddenly appears and then disappears in the flames of a bonfire, a “will-o’-the-wisp” (火の玉, hi no tama) lingers too long above harvested paddies, the “fox fire” (狐火, kitsunebi) is both seen and not seen behind hedges and thickets. Fire is one of the greatest of all transformers, for it alters anything it touches, turning dead meat into food, frigid pallor into warmth. But fire will also reduce homes or temples to ashes, destroy the labor of many hands, or cruelly terminate life. The fire obake will not submit to anyone’s control.

Centuries ago in India, the Buddha taught that nothing in this world is stable, no form of existence is anything more than a wandering through flux. People may think they have a self, and may strive to build an ego, or worry about their personal consistencies or reputations, but these concerns are delusions. A “self” is an imaginary construct; and so, in a sense, “transformation” is actually the truest manifestation of being. Obake, the ultimate transformers, point up the folly of our human security in the unchanging status of things, and obliterate our proud sense of understanding the structure of the world.

Obake both reflect and remind us of the inherent mutability in the world around us. At the same time, the elements of the observable world that appear particularly prone to change naturally come to be thought of as obake. For example, the fox is both an animal in nature and a bakemono (化け物), or “transforming thing.” Once very common throughout Japan, foxes were nevertheless seldom seen since they moved at night: dead birds, broken fences and chicken’s blood were the only evidence of their nocturnal passages. It may have been the difficulty of seeing a fox, or of keeping it in view for any period of time, which led to the notion that they undergo actual physical shift. A fox might skulk into the farmyards looking like a fox, but exit in an entirely different form—as an old woman, a boy, a demon, or a princess. In Japanese lore, they live a sort of mirror image of human society, with fox lords and ladies, servants and laborers—standing on hind legs, dressed in human clothes, and carrying out their mystic rituals by lantern light in the middle of the forest.

To the end of mitigating the powers that these worrisome animals possessed, shrines were erected, and the fox-god, Inari (稲荷), became the most popular roadside divinity, honored with a clap of the hands on passing by, or with a gift of flowers, sake, or fried tōfu (aburage, believed to be a favorite food of foxes). Even today, it is common to see a little street-corner shelter with a ceramic fox image housed behind a grill, offerings carefully placed in front to ward off all dangerous eventualities. Foxes have to be placated, for they are potentially disastrous to the livelihood of the farmer. They are also constant and salutary reminders of the fox-like characteristics that lie at the root of human behavior as well.

In the 1780s the scholar and artist

Toriyama Sekien began an exhaustive study of ghosts and ghouls in which he attempted to offer the reader a full list of all known types. The project was slightly absurd, of course, since ghosts cannot be counted up in that way, and by their very nature, obake resist normal categorization. The first volume appeared in 1781 under the title of The Hundred Demons' Night Parade (百鬼夜行, Hyakki Yakō). Toriyama produced The Illustrated Bag of One Hundred Random Ghosts (画図百鬼徒然袋, Gazu Hyakki Tsurezure-bukuro) three years later, and completed two further volumes in the years that followed, ultimately compiling what remains the most definitive list of spectral types. Each volume of the set was fully illustrated with monochrome pictures, one entire page devoted to the likeness and description of each particular spook. Toriyama's books were wildly popular in their day, and went through numerous impressions. Most modern collections of Japanese rare books have at least a few copies.

The various ghouls, ghosts and monsters that Toriyama set out to categorize are generically termed yōkai (妖怪). However, he also included some creatures that are usually thought to lie outside the realm of yōkai—for example, oni (鬼), the Japanese demon, shaggy-haired and horned, and often wielding a huge gnarled club. Oni are generally malevolent towards humanity; they are fearsome creatures that guard the portals of hell. Once a year on February 3rd there is an oni-bashing ceremony, when beans—symbolizing wealth—are thrown outside of doorways and throughout the house to cries of “Oni out, good luck in!” (Oni wa soto, fuku wa uchi). But oni, like all other beings, are susceptible to shifts; it was even said that they could be turned to good. One, included in Toriyama's list, permitted itself to become the bearer of a lamp to light a Buddhist altar. But such oni remained demons nonetheless, and would likely revert to their old selves at some unsuspecting moment, for neither their good nor their bad states were constant.

Banchō Sarayashiki (The Story of Okiku)

Okiku works as a maid at the home of the samurai Aoyama Tessen. One day while cleaning a collection of ten precious ceramic plates—a family treasure—she accidentally breaks one of them. The outraged Aoyama kills her and throws the corpse into an old well.

Every night afterwards, Okiku's ghost rises from the well, counts slowly to nine and then breaks into heartrending sobs, over and over and over again, tormenting the samurai. Finally, vengeance is wrought when Aoyama goes insane. [In an alternate version, Aoyama wishes Okiku to become his mistress, and falsely accuses her of breaking a plate so that he can offer forgiveness in exchange for her love. When she refuses, he kills her.]

Tsukioka Yoshitoshi, The Ghost of Okiku
(The Nelson-Atkins Museum of Art, Kansas City, MO)

In a category all by itself, separate from yōkai, is yet another type of Japanese ghost: the yūrei (幽霊). Whereas yōkai, for all their creepiness, can have a certain element of fun to them, yūrei are downright scary. They are the spirits or souls of the dead, and so, unlike yōkai in this way as well, were once ordinary people.

More specifically, yūrei are the ghosts of those who at the moment of death were deprived of the time to repose themselves. Quietness is necessary to achieve the spiritual calm required for attainment of Buddhahood, and the most common cause of ending up as a yūrei is sudden death by murder, slaying in battle, or rash suicide. The soul of the Japanese person cut off too soon is left to mope through a sorry existence until it is properly laid to rest, but it will never allow itself to be laid to rest until its purpose for remaining among the living (usually revenge) has been fulfilled. Most yūrei ultimately avenge themselves and rise to a better state of being, but this may take centuries—and some are never quite appeased. It is rumored that Oiwa, Japan's most famous yūrei, who obtained vengeance for her husband's cruel deeds over three

Tokaidō Yotsuya Kaidan (The Ghost Story of Tokaidō Yotsuya)

The masterless samurai Iyemon has fallen upon hard times. It is a constant struggle to support his beautiful but ailing wife Oiwa and their newborn child, and he grows increasingly resentful of her. He finally succumbs to temptation when the granddaughter of a well-to-do neighbor falls in love with him.

Encouraged by the grandfather, who wants Iyemon as a son-in-law, he poisons Oiwa with a supposedly "medicinal" drink. She becomes horribly disfigured from the poison and dies a brutal death.

To justify his murder of Oiwa, Iyemon fabricates the story that she was having an affair with his servant, Koboteke Kohei. He then murders Kohei, nails the two bodies to opposing sides of a door, and throws the door into a river.

Now Iyemon is free to enjoy his wedding rites. Flush with joy, he lifts his bride's veil to kiss her—but alas, he is confronted by the terrifying visage of Oiwa instead. In a panic he cuts off her head, only to find that he has really just killed his new wife. He rushes off in horror to confess to the grandfather, but his path is blocked by the appearance of Kohei's ghost. Again he slashes off its head, this time to find that he has killed the grandfather.

Wherever Iyemon goes, he encounters the grisly spirits of those he has murdered. One day he goes fishing to seek solace, only to reel in the door with the corpses of Oiwa and Kohei attached. Terrified, he escapes to a mountain cottage, where he is continually tormented by frightening images, such as that of Oiwa's face emerging from a lantern that swings over his head. Finally Iyemon is put out of his misery when Oiwa's brother arrives at the cottage to take vengeance for his sister's death.

Teaching English in Japan

The Glory Days Are Over

by Ian Baldwin

In the late 1980s and early 90s, during the boom years of the Japanese economy, a major chain of English language schools called Bilingual, Inc. offered a program called the "Akasaka Royal Club." By paying an exorbitant fee, members of the "Royal Club" were entitled to take any type of English lesson at any time, 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

For each of these lessons, "we'd have to pay the instructors three times their normal wage, plus cab fare home, and sometimes their hotel bill," says Daniel Watt, Bilingual's assistant personnel manager. "Plus, we'd still make a profit. So people were paying enormous amounts of money."

Fantastic as it may seem today, this sort of heady, money-saturated atmosphere surrounded the English teaching industry in Japan in the late 1980s. As the "bubble economy" expanded, Japanese consumers and corporations alike had more and more money to spend—and English was a hot product.

"It was really sort of a fashionable kick," says Watt, who arrived in Japan in the fall of 1991, just before the bubble burst. "Louis Vuitton bags and English lessons went hand in hand."

The high demand for English conversation lessons, or Eikaiwa (英会話), led to a high demand for English teachers, especially native speakers from abroad.

"At that time, virtually anybody could come over and get a job with no worries," says Terra Brockman, author of The Job Hunter's Guide to Japan. "Even if you were a complete social misfit, you could find work."

When Angela Rhead first came to Japan in the summer of 1989, most foreigners were able to find work within a week of arriving in Tokyo. To get a teaching job, "you didn't have to be university-educated, and you didn't have to be particularly eloquent," says Rhead, who is a teacher trainer and foreign personnel manager for the English school chain GEOS.

While Rhead was hired through the London office of GEOS, most people who came to work in Japan in the 1980s did so on their own, lured by stories of plentiful work and high salaries. The huge English teaching market, with seemingly endless opportunities provided by both corporations and conversation schools, rarely disappointed.

Watt, for example, landed a part-time job at an insurance company near where he lived in Tokyo shortly after his arrival in Japan. "The work was really nothing. I'd just sit at the front of the room and recite a passage that they'd written," he says. "Then they'd hand me the envelope with ¥10,000 at the end of the hour, and I'd leave."

During this period, more than a few foreigners took advantage of the relatively easy money to be earned, and alternated between the classrooms of Japan and the beaches of Thailand.

"It was kind of a stopover on the tour of Asia," says Brockman. "You would make enough money and then you'd leave, and when you ran out of money, you'd come back."

Eikaiwa used to be a sexy product in Japan. Above, one of Bilingual, Inc.'s racier ads.

• exorbitant = 法外な hōgai-na • money-saturated = 金満刺の/金あまりの kane kajō no/kanecamari no • fashionable kick = ファッションナブルな流行り fashionaburu-na hayari • kick = 熱/はやり (俗語) netsu/hayari (zokugo) • eloquent = 能弁 nōben • lure = 誘い込む vasoikomu • land = 得る (釣り上. ける) eru (tsuri-ageru) • recite = 朗読する rōdoku suru • lean = 乏しい toboshii • emphatic = 断固とした dankō to shita

That was then. Nowadays, those who casually make their way to Japan counting on finding a teaching job when they get there may be sorely disappointed: prospects for employment have become painfully lean.

When asked if she would recommend the journey to Japan to a prospective teacher today, Hill gives an emphatic "No."

"Unless they're coming for the cultural experience," she adds. "If they're coming to make money, that fantasy is over. It's not the way it used to be."

Kenneth Wagner knows that to be true. In the fall of 1988, a large English school chain in Tokyo interviewed Wagner and hired him on the spot. Feeling that the management had become overbearing, Wagner left the school in December of 1992, not realizing how much the job market had changed.

"I got out thinking that I could get a job pretty easily, but I was wrong," Wagner says. Although he was able to pick up some part-time work along the way, it was six months before he found another full-time job teaching at a small school in Tokyo. Taking the job meant accepting a salary that paid ¥50,000 per month less than his old one, but even so, he says, "I felt lucky."

The drastic change in the job market for foreign teachers is due mainly to the Japanese economy. When the "bubble economy" popped in early 1992, Japan fell into recession.

Before too long, companies began canceling or reducing employee English lessons, putting pressure on the schools that had been contracted to provide these lessons. Japanese consumers also became more price-conscious, and were no longer willing to spend huge sums on Eikaiwa. Two medium-sized English school chains, ASA and Lexington, along with many other schools, went out of business.

As the English teaching market shrank, so did the number of teaching jobs available. Yet more and more foreigners were arriving in Japan and looking for work.

"Around 1991, especially, there was a huge influx of people from overseas," says

Tony Byrne, a personnel manager for the English school chain Nova. "Before, there were times when we couldn't get enough teachers. Now it is the opposite."

Of course, not all English-speaking foreigners living in Japan came with the intent of becoming an English teacher. But even today, teaching is the most readily available work for the vast majority—although it has become available to far fewer people.

"Before, it was teaching or nothing, unless you were very lucky," Rhead says. "Now, it's still teaching, if you're qualified or experienced."

Finding a Japanese Word Processor

The easy explanation

by Douglas Horn

Q Do you think you could run a basic, "user-friendly" article on how to buy Japanese word processing software for my Mac? Most of what I read seems to be written for or by computer engineers—it couldn't be as complicated as they make it sound. Or is it? Some people have told me that the Japanese language software available today really isn't compatible with American systems. I would just like to know if I should get a dedicated Japanese word processor (and if so, what's available) or what I can buy for my Mac to write letters and reports in Japanese.

BRIDGET DOLE
Long Beach, CA

A Japanese computer software has a reputation as being hard to buy and even harder to use. In many ways, this notoriety is deserved—or was deserved. Not too many years ago, it was difficult to find vendors in North America that sold Japanese software. A handful of software resellers did exist, but they did not have many products to sell.

For many years, Japanese software was incompatible with American computers. There were a few solutions for people who needed to run Japanese software, the best being to buy a Japanese computer outright. Apple was the first to make it easy to use Japanese software, by selling a separate Japanese operating system called KanjiTalk, which can essentially turn an American Macintosh into a Japanese Macintosh.

American Macintoshes with the KanjiTalk system are able to use any Japanese Macintosh software. In recent years, more and more software has become available for the Macintosh. New Japanese PC software has also hit the market. And fortunately, as it becomes easier to find Japanese software that will run on American Macs and PCs, the software itself becomes easier to use.

Today, running Japanese word processing software on a US Macintosh or PC is as easy as installing one or two software packages onto the hard disk. Many of these software products even come with user manuals in English.

Turning a Mac into a Japanese Word Processor

If you want a Japanese word processor, and you already have a Macintosh, you're halfway home. Only two pieces of software stand between a plain old American Apple and a Japanese word processor—and one of those programs is the Japanese word processor itself.

The first piece of software is the Japanese operating system. What does it do? As we noted earlier, it essentially turns American Macs into Japanese Macs. The physical makeup—wiring and circuitry (i.e., hardware)—is the same in American and Japanese Macs, so installing this essential piece of software makes it possible to run a Japanese word processing software (or any other Japanese application) on an American computer.

Fortunately, you can also keep your US operating system on the same computer and switch between the two, depending on which language you want to operate in. That's about as far as the explanation goes without starting to sound like it's coming from a computer engineer. But fortunately, that's all most people need to know.

There are two different Japanese system software applications for the Macintosh—KanjiTalk and the Japanese Language Kit. KanjiTalk is the clear choice for anyone using a Mac for Japanese publishing or other professional uses.

For users who only need to use Japanese occasionally, Apple offers a scaled-back version called the Japanese Language Kit (JLK). This allows Mac users to run Japanese programs without their whole computer turning Japanese. (It is what is called an "extension" to the US operating system.)

The JLK will run on any recent Apple Macintosh (requires 5MB RAM and 20MB free hard disk space) running System 7.1. (See Mangajin #27 for an in-depth review of the Japanese Language Kit.) The current version of the JLK will not work with Apple's new System 7.5—a new version of the JLK which will be expected in a few months.

Once the Japanese system software is loaded onto the computer, the only other piece of software to buy is the Japanese word processor itself. Several are available. Two of the more popular are Nisus and EG Word, but there are also Japanese versions of many common English-language word processors. In fact, some word processors, such as the US version of WordPerfect, will operate very well as a Japanese wāpuro (ワープロ) once the JLK has been installed on your computer. The Mangajin Software Special (#29) lists several Japanese applications and their sources. A number of suppliers also advertise in Mangajin and any of them should be able to recommend a good word processor application for your needs.

The PC Route

Macintoshes are not the only computers capable of running Japanese word processor programs. There are also programs available for IBM PCs and clones. With the PC, you have the option of purchasing an expensive Japanese operating system just to get started, or buying a stand-alone Japanese word processor application that will run on your computer as-is. Japanese operating systems have the advantage of being able to run many different Japanese applications, but at the expense of higher prices and more complications. Professional users will require a full-blown Japanese system, but those who need just a word processor can get by much cheaper and still be satisfied.

For the PC, there are two stand out, stand-alone applications to look for: NJStar and KanjiWORD. NJStar, by Hongbo Data Systems, is a simple DOS Japanese word processor that sells for under $100. The features and printed output are not extraordinary, but they cover all the essentials. For a more feature-filled (and expensive) solution, there is KanjiWORD by Pacific Software Publishing, Inc. KanjiWORD is a Windows application that prints very attractive output. Version 3.0, set to be released soon, has output as good as any Windows True Type fonts. (For more information on these and other programs, see Mangajin issues #28 and #32.)

Dedicated Word Processors

A third option is a dedicated Japanese word processing machine, or wāpuro as they are called in Japan. Wāpuro (from the Japanese wādo-purosessā [ワードプロセッサ], "word processor") are special computer-like devices that include a screen, keyboard, and printer in one package. Their only function is Japanese word processing.

These are extremely popular in Japan, but probably not a good choice in America. First, wāpuro are generally expensive and difficult to buy in North America. Some stores in the 'Japan-town' sections of major metropolitan areas may carry Japanese wāpuro, but only at a premium. If you happen to get a lemon, or accidentally drop the contraption on the way home, having it serviced usually requires shipping the whole machine to Japan.

Wāpuro do have the advantage of already being completely set up—they rarely crash and require little computer knowledge. But they are limited to a single function and are impossible to upgrade. A wāpuro is likely to cost as much as an entry-level computer, but the computer is able to run many more types of software. For those who already have a computer, the question is moot. Japanese software is the way to go.

Does this Answer Your Question?

Buying a Japanese word processor program for a US computer is not a difficult process. The software available today works well with standard American computers and printers, and offers many advanced features, such as built-in dictionaries, multiple fonts, typeface sizes, effects, and special Japanese formatting options.

Like anything, buying Japanese software can be as difficult as you choose to make it. There are currently over a hundred Japanese software applications for sale in the United States, covering just about every possible circumstance. The wonderful thing is that as complicated as it could be, buying Japanese software can also be very easy.

A Businessman's Life in Kanazawa

Japan is famous abroad for manufacturing high quality products at a reasonable cost.

Companies who want to remain competitive on a worldwide scale can learn a lot from leading Japanese firms.

To do this on the scene, Japanese language is an absolute necessity. I learned during my studies at Eurocentre that Kanazawa is a wonderful place to acquire this knowledge of language and lifestyle.

by Anton Kölbener

As a 46-year-old manufacturing engineer, I have been monitoring the rise of Japanese economic power for more than 15 years. Reading the book Japan's Herzen denken anders ("Japanese Hearts Think Differently") by Lorenz Stucki in 1983 created a dream for me: "Someday I want to go there!" Then, in 1992 I read the book Kaizen (which means "continuous improvement") written by the famous Japanese consultant Masaaki Imai. Successfully applying the methods he described in a Swiss factory producing food processing equipment, I was able to realize my dream. Financial resources of my own, a grant from the Swiss Academy of Technical Sciences, and money from my company made it possible.

Prices and budgets

Japan is not a cheap country. I sometimes get the impression that Japanese people are even proud of this fact. On the other hand, you can be sure about the quality of goods and services.

Compared with Switzerland, however, not everything is expensive. Eating out in one of the many small restaurants is cheaper (around 800 yen). But by all means avoid ordering drinks in addition to water (which is free). Vending machines (110 yen a can) on every corner make this rule easy to follow. When planning a budget, it is also important to remember that lunch is not included while living in a homestay.

I spent about 1600 US dollars or 2200 Swiss francs a month. But this may not be a typical budget, as I had a lot of business costs, like travelling (to visit machine tool manufacturers) and fax expenses.

The language course

Come here without any knowledge in Japanese only if you are very bright! Although there are courses for beginners, the speed is tremendous. Acquiring some everyday vocabulary beforehand makes the studies here easier and more productive. Learning to read hiragana and katakana, at least, can be done by oneself. There are special lessons in the afternoon for this, but you will be glad not to have to concentrate on learning to read. What remains to be memorized is big enough. This and the homework will keep you busy at least another four hours per day at home.

I studied for a period of three months. Normally this is the maximum students can cope with productively. After such a period, even more advanced students were exhausted and felt forced to take a break.

Homestay with my family

This is a rewarding experience, and as always in human relations, it is not a one-way happening. To share one's adventures and activities with a homestay family promotes personal relationships.

My wife and daughter joined me for the last four weeks in July. They had a really good time despite not being able to speak any Japanese. Once, together with my classmates, we cycled down to the Kanazawa beach on a Friday afternoon. The staff of Eurocentre procured a bicycle for my wife free of charge from the International Women's Association.

We are now trying hard to convince our 68-year-old landlady to visit us in Switzerland next year. When we left, there were tears and broken hearts.

Japanese Ways of Communicating

Japanese toilets looked somehow different from those I am used to, so I always took off my trousers. There was a bowl with dried flowers in the bathroom that fell down and broke due to my not being careful enough. Of course I apologized with all my Japanese and the landlady said everything would be OK. But the next day a part of the broken bowl was put in its original place for 24 hours. Then it disappeared. I interpreted this as a message to be more careful in her house. Is there a softer way to get a message across?

Once I was cycling to school and forgot about how cars drive "on the other side" here in Japan, so I was cycling on the wrong side of the street. A car nearly hit me, and it was my own fault. About 50 meters up the road the car stopped, and I had to pass by. The car's windows were closed and no words were exchanged. The message was clear: be more careful, for your own protection.

The day before we left the house of our landlady we all felt a sort of sadness. The landlady mentioned it, too, and said: sabishii desu ("I am sad.") As Westerners usually do, we tried to bridge the situation with a lot of words until she said: Ima kotoba irimasen ("Words are not necessary now.") We then realised that communicating without words can be very effective.

On the other hand, Japanese people can be surprisingly straightforward in airing judgments or instructions, as when a teacher says, "Your Japanese sentence structure does not sound very Japanese," or the landlady says, "Take a shower now!"

Looking back and forward

I am staying in Japan for one year all together. The first three months that I spent studying the language and living in a Japanese home was a wonderful experience. It will be a big advantage in my future training at my company's branch office in Yokohama, followed by special training offered by the Japan External Trade Organization (JETRO) and finally six months of working in two Canon factories north of Tokyo.

OUTRAGEOUS JAPANESE

The Japanese generally strive for surface harmony and try to avoid antagonistic confrontations when possible. As a result, they do not generate verbal vitriol in the quantity or variety that can be attributed to some other nationalities. But this is not to suggest that they are without their resources. As you will see, the Japanese can be inventive users of invective that is both vivid and injurious.

Continuing our series of excerpts from the book Outrageous Japanese, here is:

Using Living Creatures as Tools of Defamation, Part 2

Insects

Mushi (虫) is the everyday term for insects (or bugs) while the scholarly term is konchū (昆虫). Kemushi (毛虫 — the kanji mean “hair-bug”) is a caterpillar and gives us an example of how two cultures view the same object differently. I don’t know that many Westerners would care to cuddle a caterpillar, but we certainly don’t hold the degree of hostility toward them that the Japanese apparently do. I have heard, however, of one variety of Japanese caterpillar that stings, which may be a contributing factor.

毛虫のようなやつ

kemushi no yō-na yatsu

“despicable fellow” (lit., someone like a caterpillar)

Other insect-related taunts are:

弱虫

yowa-mushi

“weakling” (lit., “weak bug”)

泣き虫

naki-mushi

“crybaby”

点取り虫

tentori-mushi

• literally “point-taking bug,” tentori-mushi refers to a student who is excessively concerned with grades. It might be tempting to translate this as “bookworm,” but a tentori-mushi would read only textbooks or materials that contribute directly to better test scores.

ごきぶり亭主

gokiburi teishū

“a ‘cockroach’ husband”

• This term was apparently coined to describe husbands who invaded that traditionally female territory, the kitchen. Whether they were trying to cook, or were simply searching for food, their presence was considered annoying. Nowadays, the scope of the term seems to have expanded and it is sometimes used to mean “lazy, good-for-nothing husband.”

Four-legged Creatures

The kanji 獣 can be read kemono or kedamono, the former generally referring to “wild animals” in the literal sense, while the latter is used almost exclusively as an insult for brutish humans. This kanji can also be combined with the kanji for “field” (野) to make the word yajū (野獣, “beast/beastly person”), which, although perhaps slightly less pejorative, can be an effective insult in the proper context.

その 犯罪人 は 野獣 の ような もん だ。

Sono hanzai-nin wa yajū no yō na mon da.

“That criminal is a beast.”

The word chikushō apparently came from a Sanskrit word which refers to all non-human “creatures,” including animals, birds, fish, insects, etc. Buddhism holds that certain types of wrongdoing in this life can result in reincarnation into one of these life forms. The insult is also a reference to chikushō-dō (畜生道)—the world of chikushō—which is one of the Buddhist hells.

Chikushō is listed in the dictionary as meaning “beast” or “dumb brute,” but it can also be used as an interjection, something like “S.O.B.”

この畜生め!

Kono chikushō-me!

“You beast/You S.O.B.!”

畜生!

Chikushō!

“Dammit/S.O.B.!”

The material in this column is excerpted from the book Outrageous Japanese, by Jack Seward, Charles E. Tuttle, Inc., Tokyo, Japan. MANGAJIN has added Japanese kanji and kana, as well as grammar and vocabulary notes.

- although kono literally means “this . . .,” it’s used like the English “you . . .” to direct the insult at a specific person.
- kono chikushō is often contracted to konchikushō.
- the suffix -me adds emphasis and is frequently used with insults.

Tanuki

The tanuki (狸) is considered in Japan to be a crafty, rather amusing creature with supernatural powers (as well as a penchant for sake and debauchery in general). Although tanuki is sometimes translated as “badger,” it is actually a member of the dog family. It is used in such gibes as:

狸親父 tanuki-oyaji — “cunning old man”
 狸ばばあ tanuki-babā — “crafty old woman”

この狸め
Kono tanuki-me
 “You sly dog”

Although not strictly speaking an insult, the following expression is related to the image of tanuki as crafty.

狸寝入り tanuki-neiri — “playing possum”
 (i.e., feigning sleep; the verb is tanuki-neiri o suru)

Foxes

Like the tanuki, the fox (狐, kitsune) is regarded as a wily and crafty, though not so amusing, animal. In ancient Japan, foxes were considered sacred; even today Inari Jinja (稲荷神社), shrines dedicated to the fox deity, are a common sight.

Foxes are said to sometime abuse their supernatural powers by possessing humans.

若い時にその百姓は狐につかれたそうです。
Wakai toki ni sono hyakushō wa kitsune ni tsukareta sō desu.

今でもなんとなくおかしいようだ。
Ima demo nan-to-naku okashii yō da.

“It is said that farmer was possessed by a fox when he was young. Even now there’s something strange about him.”

Dogs and Monkeys

The Japanese equivalent of the expression “fight like cats and dogs” is “fight like dogs and monkeys.”

あの二人はいつも犬と猿のように喧嘩をしています。
Ano futari wa itsumo inu to saru no yō ni kenka o shite imasu.
 “That pair is always at it like cats and dogs.”

The kanji for “dog” (犬) and “monkey” (猿) can be combined (犬猿, read ken'en) for an alternate expression.

あの二人は犬猿の仲だ。
Ano futari wa ken'en no naka da.

“Those two are always at each other’s throats.”

Although a dog may be man’s best friend in the West, inu can be used to mean “spy” in Japanese.

警察の犬 keisatsu no inu — “a police spy”

Here is another disparaging reference to canine traits:

犬の遠吠え inu no tō-boe — “useless/cowardly complaining”

- inu no tō-boe literally means “the barking of a far-away dog.” It refers to a weak person or coward who speaks badly of others behind their backs, without ever coming out and saying what’s on his or her mind — like a dog barking at a person or a strong opponent from a safe distance.

Westerners tend to think of members of the monkey family as clever, agile, and rather amusing creatures. Although perhaps some Japanese feel similarly, the following expressions indicate the general feeling is otherwise:

猿真似屋 sarumane-ya — “copycat”
 (lit., someone who imitates things like a monkey)

山猿 yamazaru — “hillbilly/country hick”
 (lit., mountain monkey)

An example of the kind of evil cunning associated with monkeys in Japan is found in a well-known children’s story, Saru-Kani Kassen (猿蟹合戦, “The Battle Between the Monkey and the Crab”). In the story, the monkey deceives the crab, first by trading it a persimmon seed for a rice ball, and then, after the seed has grown into a tree, by offering to pick the fruit for the crab. The monkey eats all the good fruit himself and throws down only hard, green persimmons, eventually killing the crab.

A hihi (ひひ) is a dog-faced baboon. By adding jijii (old man), we get a very sharp barb:

ひひじじい hihi-jijii
 “dirty old man/lustful old goat” (lit., baboon-like old man)

In the next installment we will investigate injurious uses of terms relating to cows, cats, horses, pigs, and bears.

INTRODUCING

Japan Related

A Cross-Cultural Journal

Introducing Japan Related, a new magazine created to help Japanese and Americans work together more effectively.

Differences in American and Japanese values, beliefs and attitudes can lead to cultural clashes in any situation, but in business relationships these clashes can become especially intense since money, jobs and even personal honor are at stake. When Japanese and Americans work together, communication is essential, and it has to flow in both directions.

Japan Related was created to facilitate this essential communication.

For American readers, Japan Related provides the background information needed to succeed in a Japanese environment. It offers insights into the attitudes and behavior of Japanese bosses, co-workers, subordinates, suppliers and customers.

For Japanese readers, Japan Related provides access to American voices they might not hear otherwise. It also offers valuable perspective on how they are perceived by their American colleagues. This awareness can help prevent unnecessary miscommunication and conflict.

Each issue of Japan Related focuses on a theme—topics like: negotiation, decision-making, cross-cultural gender issues, quality standards, and performance evaluation. Key articles are presented in both Japanese and English to stimulate cross-cultural discussions, and to provide living, relevant material to language students on both sides of the barrier.

Don't miss out on this opportunity to learn about Japan and generate a productive dialogue between Japanese and Americans. Subscribe to Japan Related today!

Indeed, with the recent surplus of foreign teachers, English conversation schools today can afford to be far choosier when hiring. No longer content with just any native English speaker, schools look for applicants with graduate degrees in education, TEFL (Teaching English as a Foreign Language) certification, classroom experience, and, at the very least, an adaptable personality. Due to Japanese immigration law, a college degree is a must.

But even when a school finds a suitable hire, it may be quite a while before the new teacher can begin work. In most cases, a school must handle a new teacher's application for a full-time work visa, which the Japanese Ministry of Immigration now takes up to four months to process.

Due to this complex, drawn-out visa process, and the desire for better qualified teachers, schools are increasingly shifting to recruiting foreign employees directly from overseas. Nova, one of the three largest chain schools in Japan (GEOS and Aeon are the other two), hires 600 to 700 teachers per year, 80 percent of its total full-time hires, through its personnel offices in Boston, Toronto, and London. Nova plans to increase this to nearly 100 percent next year, while maintaining part-time hiring in Japan. Aeon hires about 200 full-time teachers per year from offices in Chicago and Los Angeles. GEOS maintains personnel offices in Toronto and Vancouver, and has always hired all of its foreign teachers, who currently number about 500, from abroad. (The government-sponsored JET program, which places about 4,000 foreign teachers in public schools every year, does all of its hiring overseas as well.)

"I think it's the best way to guarantee the quality of teachers," Nova foreign personnel supervisor Denis Fuelling says of overseas recruiting.

This sort of hiring philosophy will come to have more and more of an effect on a foreigner's chances of landing a teaching job in Japan. Recently, chain schools have expanded rapidly into suburban areas, often pushing out smaller, independent schools that hired only in Japan. Thus, a handful of large chain schools that favor overseas hiring are coming to control the majority of English teaching jobs for foreigners, making the market for job hunters in Japan much tighter.

Fortunately, there are still plenty of advertisements in Tokyo English-language newspapers soliciting teachers with legal work visas. For visa-less first-timers, however, overseas hiring may soon be the only way to go.

Meanwhile, the volatile English teaching market continues to shrink. Just as this article was being completed, Bilingual, which had split its business between company classes and 21 conversation schools, ceased all operations due to bankruptcy.

BASIC JAPANESE through comics

Lesson 40 • The Many Faces of “Face” (2)

In Part 1 of our series on “face,” we illustrated expressions that use the word kao, or its often derogatory cousin tsura. In most of those examples kao or tsura referred to the appearance of the physical face: handsome, smiling, troubled, innocent, an open book, and so forth. In this lesson, we will focus on expressions having to do with one’s social face—which is to say, with appearances, honor, dignity, and reputation.

As with the English word “face,” kao (and sometimes even tsura) can be used for the more figurative meaning of “social face.” More common for this meaning, though, are the words menboku (面目) and mentsu (面分). You may sometimes hear these words in reference to physical face, but they are predominantly used when speaking of social face; they appear in expressions that essentially correspond to “lose face” and “save face” in English, as well as in other expressions of shame or embarrassment. The two words are pretty much interchangeable, but kao cannot always be substituted, nor can they always be substituted for kao.

Perhaps even more than in most of our lessons, the examples chosen here illustrate an important Japanese cultural trait along with language usage. We hope you’ll note the degree to which each person’s actions are perceived as affecting the reputation, or “face,” of the people and organizations associated with him.

Awaseru kao ga nai—have no face to meet with Hanazono has been spending all of his time at judo practice and neglecting his girlfriend Fujiko. Yawara, a mutual friend, meets him for coffee to urge him to see Fujiko and apologize, but Hanazono, ashamed that he has been doing poorly in judo while Fujiko is in top form, declares that he won’t see her until he makes first string on the team.

- Hanazono: 今は合わせる顔がない!
Ima wa awaseru kao ga nai!
 now as-for unite face (subj.) not exist/don’t have
 “As for now, I don’t have a face to bring together with her.”
 “I simply can’t face her right now!” (PL3)
- awaseru (more commonly written 合わせる in this expression) means “put together/unite,” so 顔を合わせる kao o awaseru (literally, “put/bring faces together”) is an expression for “meet.” Awaseru kao ga nai (literally, “not have a face to bring together”) is an expression used when you’re too embarrassed or ashamed to meet/show your face to someone.

Kao o tsubusu—crush a person's face

A blackmailer has approached Shima Kachō with compromising photographs of the wife of his colleague Hirai, as well as evidence that she was leaking company secrets. Shima advises Hirai to make a clean breast of the situation to the company and divorce his wife, but Hirai is concerned about the loss of face this would cause the man who served as go-between for his marriage.

Hirai: いや、離婚は出来ません!

"If I did that, it would become a loss of face for Vice-President Inoue, who served as our go-between."

"If I do that, I'll bring shame upon our go-between, Vice-President Inoue." (PL2)

- kao o tsubusu (literally "crush [someone's] face"), or its passive counterpart, kao ga tsubureru (literally, "[someone's] face is crushed"), refers to situations where a person "loses face" or receives a blow to his/her dignity/reputation. Other synonymous expressions include kao ni dorō o nuru ("spread mud on a person's face") and kao o yogosu ("soil/stain a person's face").

Kao o tateru—prop up a person's face

Several OLs from the Tōzai Newspaper decide to go out for gyōza ("potstickers"), and Yoshiko insists on choosing the place. When they get there, they see that it's a chain restaurant and are reluctant to enter—but they go in anyway, out of respect for Yoshiko.

 face (obj.) uphold/prop up (quote) do (?)
 "Well, shall we specially uphold Yoshiko's face?"
"OK, let's do this as a special favor for Yoshiko, shall we?" (PL2)

- tateru basically means "make stand," and refers to putting something in an upright/vertical position, or propping it up so that it will not fall from such a position.
- in many cases, kao o tateru would more literally mean "preserve/uphold (someone's) face/honor/reputation," but it can also be a simple matter of doing someone a favor.

Menboku ga tsubureru—face crumbles

The o-chūgen gift sent to the home of an important client at the request of Department Head Medaka has been returned: the General Affairs Section staff had sent pet supplies for dogs instead of for cats. Medaka is furious because it represents a serious loss of face for him that the wrong gift was sent.

Medaka: おかげで ぼくの 面目 は completely crushed is

“Thanks to your screw-up, I’ve lost face completely.” (PL2)

Kachō: もうしわけありません。
Mōshiwake arimasen.
“I’m terribly sorry.” (PL4)

- okage de means “owing to/thanks to/as a result of.” It can be used either for giving credit or assigning blame.
- maru- is used as a prefix meaning “whole/complete”; when prefixed to the noun form of a verb, it means the action occurs/occurred “completely/fully.” Tsubure is the noun form of tsubureru (“be crushed”), so maru-tsubure da = “is completely crushed.” In an even more dire circumstance, menboku maru-tsubure can mean “(one’s) reputation has been completely destroyed.”
- mōshiwake arimasen is a very polite/formal apology. It literally means “I have no excuse” but is better thought of simply as “I’m terribly sorry” or “Please accept my deepest apologies.”

Menboku ga tatanai—face will not stand

The magistrate is explaining why a samurai tried to hide the fact that his wife’s death was a double suicide with her illicit lover.

Magistrate: かかあが 若い 男 と 姦通、
Kakā ga wakai otoko to kantsū, wife (subj.) young man with adultery 拳句の果てに 心中 じゃあよ、 ageku no hate ni shinjū jā yo,

Magistrate: 武士の 面目 は 立たねえよ な。

 samurai’s face as-for not stand (emph.) (colloq.)
 “the honor/dignity of a samurai won’t stand, will it?”
“it’d be pretty hard to uphold your honor as a samurai, wouldn’t it?” (PL2)

© Akiyama Jōji / Haguregumo, Shogakukan

- kakā is an informal, old-fashioned word for “wife.”
- ageku no hate ni means “ultimately” with a nuance of “on top of it all/to make things worse.”
- shinjū refers to more than one person—usually lovers or family members—agreeing to kill themselves together.
- tatanē is a masculine/slang version of tatanai, negative of tatsu (“[something] stands”), the intransitive counterpart to tateru (“stand [something] up/uphold [something]”) seen above.

Menboku o tamotsu—preserve face

The General Affairs staff of the example on the facing page arrange for a complete flea fumigation of the client's house to make amends for the mix-up with the pet supplies. A short while later, Medaka comes to thank the staff, saying the client was ecstatic over the improved conditions at home for his wife, who had been having an allergic reaction to her cats' fleas.

Medaka:

こっちも キミたちのおかげで
Kotchi mo kimi-tachi no okage de menboku o tamotsu koto ga dekite tasukatta.

“Thanks to you, I’ve been able to preserve my honor. I’m very grateful.” (PL2)

また 来年のお中元もあれで頼むよ。
Mata rainen no o-chūgen mo are de tanomu yo.
 again next year 's summer gift also that with request (emph.)
“Please go with that for next year’s o-chūgen, too.” (PL2)

- menboku o tamotsu is literally “preserve face/honor.”
- ... koto ga dekiru after the plain form of a verb essentially makes a potential form, “can/be able to (do the action.)”
- tasukatta is the plain/abrupt past form of tasukaru (“be helped/saved”). It’s frequently used as an expression of gratitude.
- o-chūgen (the honorific o- is almost always included) refers to the custom of giving gifts at midsummer to one’s boss, important business associates, and other social superiors, as a token of gratitude for favors received. The gifts themselves are also called o-chūgen.

Menboku shidai mo arimasen—no face whatsoever

Long-time rivals Iwagawa from Nissei Television and Koizumi from the Tōzai Newspaper got into a public shouting match over the pedigrees of their cats, which culminated in the two challenging each other to a kendō duel. Their employers have arranged a dinner meeting to point out to them the damage their feud could bring to the companies, and they are persuaded to apologize.

© Kariya & Hanasaki / Oishinbo, Shogakukan

Iwagawa:

まことにどうも、 面目次第 も ありません。
Makoto ni dōmo, menboku shidai mo arimasen.
 truly very much face/honor also/even have none
“I am truly very sorry.” (PL3)

- dōmo is an intensifier, commonly used with expressions of apology/thanks/greetings/etc.
- menboku shidai is essentially a more formal and polite form of menboku. It almost always appears in the phrasing used here — though arimasen can become nai (“have none,” PL2) or gozaimasen (“have none,” PL4). Other possible translations are “I have no excuse/I can put no good face on it/I am truly ashamed.”

Mentsu—honor

A banquet for 1,000 scheduled at the Hotel Platon has been canceled and moved to a rival hotel at the last minute, leaving the Platon with roomfuls of perishable food they can no longer use. Faced with the possibility of monumental losses, Manager Tōdō agrees to sell the food to the rival hotel, but this man from the sales department finds that hard to swallow.

 that if it is our face/honor as-for どうなるんだ?! dō naru na da?!
 what/how becomes (explan.)

“But in that case, what becomes of our honor?” (PL2)

- uchi, literally “inside,” is often used to refer to one’s own home/workplace.
- asking a question with na da is mostly masculine and usually sounds quite rough. In a case like this the question is essentially rhetorical.

Mentsu ni kakete—staking one’s face

President Ōizumi Yūsuke of Hatsushiba Densen (a fictional company modeled on Matsushita) suddenly collapsed due to an apparent stroke while in a young woman’s apartment. An ambulance is called, and after the doctor learns his patient is a VIP, he pledges to do his best with his hospital’s reputation at stake.

頑張ってみます!

“The president of Hatsushiba...? I see. Staking our hospital’s name on it, we’ll do everything we can!” (PL2)

- ganbaru means “exert efforts/work diligently/do one’s best,” and mimasu is from the verb miru, which, when added to the -te form of another verb, means “try and do one’s best/do one’s best and see.”

Mentsu ni kodawaru—be particular about one's face

Section Chief Tomii of the Tōzai Newspaper publicly insulted some reporters from the Teito Newspaper in a fit of drunken excess after besting them in a golf match. He got carried away with his golf victory in part because Teito recently overtook Tōzai in circulation. Now Teito is threatening to have Tōzai's membership in the press club canceled and refuses to accept any apologies.

 こだわっている ン だろう。
kodawatte iru n darō.
 are standing/sticking (explan.) probably/perhaps
"I suppose they're standing on their dignity as the paper with the highest circulation in Japan." (PL2)

- tsupparanakutatte is a colloquial conditional form of tsupparu ("push/thrust/insist"). The implied meaning is that "if they didn't push things that far, it would be OK."
- kodawaru means "to be very particular about/stuck on/hung up on" a certain point, so B is surmising that Teito is "hung up on" its face/honor/dignity as the leading newspaper.

Mentsu o ushinau—lose face

In another contest between Yamaoka and Kaibara of the two rival newspapers Tōzai and Teito, Yamaoka has deliberately thrown the competition by first warning Ryōzō, who is in chef's training under Kaibara, to avoid the faux pas of serving horsemeat to a horse lover; and then deliberately committing that faux pas himself. Ryōzō has come to thank Yamaoka.

© Kariya & Hanasaki / Otshinbo, Shogakukan

"In order to help my brother and me out, you went so far as to (deliberately) do something that (you knew) would make you lose face." (PL3-4)

- ushinai = "lose," so mentsu/menboku o ushinai is literally "lose face." Kao is not used with this verb.

What's an “Obatarian?”

The name Obatarian was coined from two words: obasan (おばさん), literally “aunt,” but used as a generic term for middle-aged or adult women; and batarian (バタリアン), from the Japanese title of the American horror movie Return of the Living Dead—a reference to the “battalions” of zombies in the film. The word, now firmly ensconced in the Japanese language thanks to this popular manga, is used to refer to a type of middle-aged woman who strikes terror into the hearts of people around her, or at least raises a few eyebrows.

After years of managing husbands, children, and household budgets, “Obatarians” seem to be using the authority of their middle years to focus at last on themselves, without regard to the social norms dictated for women in Japan.

Obatarian can often be seen furiously playing pachinko or aggressively elbowing her way onto a crowded train. In this series, Obatarian is most commonly drawn as the character shown here (plump with short, curly hair), but the name is also used to refer to several other similar characters who appear in the manga.

- a! is an exclamation of surprise/sudden awareness.
- tonari refers to an adjacent/neighboring location, so when speaking of houses/apartments it means "next door," when speaking of seats it means "the next seat," etc. Tonari no = "in/of/from the next house/seat/etc." The prefix o- is honorific.
- if she were to complete her sentence, it might end either with the neighbor lady's surname plus -san, or with obasan (see introduction).

3 Obatarian: うるさいわ ねー!!

"Don't you know what time it is?!" (PL2)

- urusai literally means "noisy/bothersome," and it's often used like English "Be quiet!/Shut up!/Simmer down!"
- wa is a feminine touch, and nē essentially adds emphasis.
- omotte-ru is a contraction of omotte-iru, the progressive ("is/are -ing") form of omou ("think"). The quotative to marks what comes before it as the content of the thinking.
- in colloquial speech, it's quite common to ask a question using the explanatory no.

"What's that? Sheesh!" (PL2)

- suimasen is a colloquial sumimasen, which can mean either "sorry/excuse me" or "thank you" depending on the context.
- mochiawase refers to something "on hand/in stock."
- nakute is a negative -te form of nai ("not have/not exist"). From the context we understand something like haraenai ("cannot pay up") follows.
- nan da (literally "what is it?") is often used idiomatically to express disappointment/disdain/disgust.
- shō ga nē is masculine slang for shō ga nai, a variation of shikata ga nai, literally, "there is no way to do/nothing one can do" → "there's no help for it." Sometimes it's used to express exasperation with one's listener.

"My address?" (PL3)

- taku = "home/residence": adding the honorific prefix o- makes it "your home/house" or "you" depending on the context. Here it could be either. In a corporate setting otaku becomes "you/your company."
- kiite is the -te form of kiku ("listen/hear"), and okō is the volitional ("let's/I shall/I think I'll") form of oku ("set/leave"). Oku after the -te form of another verb implies the action will be done in anticipation of some future event/need. "Oh, are you a priest?" (PL2-3)

- the city of Tokyo has 23 ku, or "wards," each of them the size of a good-sized city. Taitō-ku is the area around Ueno Station in central Tokyo; Yanaka is an area northwest of Ueno (nearest to Nippori Station) where quite a few Buddhist temples and cemeteries are located.
- in this case nan da is an expression of mild surprise: "Oh/Huh?"
- he says oshō-san with the intonation of a question. Ka (or desu ka), for making questions, is often omitted in colloquial speech.

Man: 近くで人が死んだな。

Chikaku de hito ga shinda na.

nearby at person (subj.) died (colloq.)

"Someone must have died near here." (PL2)

- chikaku is a noun referring to "the vicinity/area nearby," and de marks it as the location where some action took place.
- shinda is the plain/abrupt past form of shiru ("to die").
- the colloquial particle na expresses a kind of self-check/confirmation, like an English tag, "(it is,) isn't it/(that appears to be the case,) doesn't it?"

- ghosts are portrayed in Japan as having no feet.
- in ancient Japan, crows were considered sacred. Even today some shrines have rituals involving crows, and the idea that they possess magical powers lingers in folk beliefs. Since it is widely known that crows are scavengers and they can be seen picking at the bodies of dead animals, it is thought that crows can detect a dying person. Crows have therefore come to symbolize death, and may appear soon before or soon after someone's death in modern Japanese literature. In this manga, the crows have come to the scene of a fatal traffic accident and are observed by the ghost of the victim (who apparently doesn't realize yet that he has died).

Title: お盆
O-bon
Obon

Ghost 1: ウー
U-
"Uuuugh." (groan)

- Bon (or Urabon: the honorific o- prefix is used only with the shorter name) is a Buddhist festival in which spirits of the deceased are allowed to visit the homes of their living descendants. It is observed each year from August 13 through 15 or 16 (or the same days in July in some areas). Typically a shōryō-dana (精霊棚, "spirit shelf/altar") is set up in front of the butsudan, the permanent family ancestor altar, to make special offerings and welcome the ancestors' spirits home.

Ghost 2: どう しました?
Dō shimashita?
what/how did
"What's wrong?" (PL3)

- dō is "what/how," and shimashita is the PL3 past form of suru ("do/make"), so dō shimashita is literally "what/how did (you) do (something)," but it's used idiomatically to ask for an explanation of something that seems out of the ordinary: "what happened?/what's wrong?/what's going on?"

Ghost 1: それが、なんだか今日は
Sore ga, nan da ka kyō wa that (subj.) kind of today as-for 朝 から目まいがして...
asa kara memai ga shite ...
morning from be dizzy (cause)
"Well, I've been feeling kind of dizzy today, since this morning." (PL2)

Ghost 2: そりゃ いけませんナ。
Sorya ikemasen na.
as for that no good/won't do (colloq.)
"That's too bad." (PL3)

- sore ga is used idiomatically as a kind of "warm-up" when telling the listener something unfortunate/awkward/negative.
- nan da ka (literally "What is it?") has the idiomatic meaning of "somehow/sort of."
- kara = "from," so following a time word it means "from the specified time."
- memai is a noun for "dizziness," and memai ga shite is the -te form of the verb phrase memai ga suru, "be dizzy." Given the context, something like guai ga warui ("feeling is bad" → "I'm not feeling well") is understood after memai ga shite, with the -te form used to imply the preceding is the cause/reason for what follows.
- sorya is a contraction of sore wa, "that" plus the topic marker wa: "as for that."
- ikemasen is the PL3 form of ikenai ("no good/won't do"). Sore wa ikemasen ne/na is an expression of sympathy over something unfortunate/troublesome/undesirable: "that's too bad/I'm sorry to hear that/what a shame/etc." The colloquial ne/na on the end assumes the listener agrees, but in this case it would be excessive to translate it as a tag question "isn't it?"

- the family has apparently run out of (or neglected to buy) the normal stick incense offered to the spirits on the shōryō-dana and substituted a mosquito-repelling incense coil.

Take'emon-ke no Hitobito

The Take'emon Clan

The title of this manga series contains an interesting case of a silent kanji character in the name Take'emon (竹右衛門). The first character, take (竹, "bamboo") is straightforward, but the combination 右衛門, read here as emon, is actually short for uemon, which means "Right Gate Guards." In the Imperial Guards of the pre-modern period, there was a group called

by 佐藤竹右衛門 / Satō Take'emon

the “Gate Guards,” and these were divided into “Right Gate Guards” (右衛門, uemon) and “Left Gate Guards” (左衛門, saemon). There were two or three other categories of Imperial Guards as well, but for some reason uemon and saemon came to be commonly used in male names of the samurai class (and eventually non-samurai, too), typically with another character or two before them. When there’s something else before it, uemon generally gets shortened to emon; saemon remains in its full form, but often becomes -zaemon (e.g., Gorōzaemon).

The two e’s in Take’emon are pronounced separately, with a slight “catch” in the throat between them, differentiating the sound from a single long ē.

As for the rest of the title, 家 -ke means “house/family/clan,” and . . . のひとびと (. . . no hitobito) is “the people of . . .” All together, the title means “the people/members of the Take’emon family” or just “the Take’emon clan.”

NHK Man: やったー! 発見!!
Yattā-! Hakken!

“Hooray! Bingo!” (PL2)

またいっこみつけ。ガハハハ
Mata ikko mikke. Ga ha ha ha again one found (gloating laugh)
“I’ve found another one. Ha ha ha ha.” (PL2)

- yatta is the plain/abrupt past form of yaru (“do”), so it literally means “(I/we/he) did it,” but one of its most prominent uses is as an exclamation of joy, “Alright!/Yeah!/Hooray!” See Basic Japanese 13.
- ikko is from ichi (“one”) and -ko, a counter suffix that is more typically used for small objects. It is also used colloquially, as in this case, as a kind of generic counter suffix.
- mikke is an informal contraction of mitsuketa, the plain/abrupt past form of mitsukeru (“find/come upon [something]”).
- “NHK” stands for 日本放送協会 Nihon Hōsō Kyōkai (“Japan Broadcasting Corporation”), Japan’s equivalent of a national/public broadcasting network.

NHK Man: ちゃんと BS って 書いてある じゃない の!
Chān-to bii-esu tte kaite aru ja nai no!
clearly BS (quote) is written/inscribed isn’t it? (explan.)
“It clearly has ‘BS’ written on it, does it not?”
“It clearly says ‘BS!’” (PL2)

Dog: あれは ネ、ブラックホール システム と よむ の。
Are wa ne, burakku hōru shisutemu to yomu no.
that as-for (colloq.) black hole system (quote) read (explan.)
“As for that, you see, you read it ‘Black hole System.’”
“For your information, that stands for ‘Black hole System.’” (PL2)

Dog: 受信料 は UFO にはらってる から。
Jushin-ryō wa yūfō ni haratte-ru kara.
reception fee as-for UFO to am paying because/so “I’m paying the satellite reception fee to a UFO, (so . . .)” (PL2)

Dog: わるい けど。
Warui kedo.
bad/sorry but “Sorry.” (PL2)

- chan-to, here lengthened to chān-to for emphasis, often means “duly/properly/neatly,” but here the sense is closer to “clearly/exactly as I’ve asserted.”
- “BS,” as the NHK man sees it, stands for “Broadcasting Satellite,” implying the dish is for receiving NHK’s satellite broadcasts. He is trying to collect the jushin-ryō, or “reception/viewing fee.” NHK programming has long been nearly 100% financed by the reception fees it is authorized to collect for its regular over-the-air programming from all TV set owners, so the sight of an NHK bill collector making his rounds is a familiar one in Japan. Owners without outdoor antennas have been known to deny ownership of a set, and the bill collectors, for their part, have been known to do a certain amount of snooping around to uncover such “cheaters.”
- tte is a colloquial equivalent of quotative to.
- kaite is the -te form of kaku (“write”) and aru = “exists” (for inanimate things). Aru after the -te form of a verb means the action was done and the result “exists/remains in effect.”
- ja nai literally means “is not,” and no is the explanatory no; ja nai no essentially asks for an explanation, “isn’t it the case that . . . ?,” but here it has more the feeling of an assertion/accusation than a question.
- ne in the middle of a sentence is a kind of verbal pause, similar to the English “you know/you see/I mean/like.”
- “UFO” is invariably written with the English letters, and most commonly read as a single word ユーフォー yūfō, though one also hears it spelled out in katakana ユー・エフ・オー yū efu ō.
- haratte-(i)ru is from harau (“pay”).
- warui literally means “bad,” but it’s often used idiomatically as an apology (“it’s bad of me” → “I’m sorry”).
- the dog’s syntax is inverted. Normal order would be Warui kedo jushin-ryō wa UFO ni haratte-ru kara . . . = “I’m sorry, but because I’m paying my reception fee to a UFO . . .,” implying “therefore I don’t have to pay you.”

The Take'emon Clan

by 佐藤竹衛門 / Satō Take'emon

Dog: あ、あの、すみません。ちょっとインタビューを。
Anō, suimasen. Chotto intabyū o.
(interj.) (apology) a little interview (obj.)
"Uhh, excuse me. (I'd like to) interview (you) a little." (PL3)

- anō is a hesitation word similar to "uhh/um." When used to get someone's attention, it can be considered essentially like "Excuse me," but since here it's used together with suimasen we left it as a hesitation word.
- suimasen is a colloquial variation of sumimasen ("I'm sorry/excuse me").
- chotto = "a little bit"; it's often used when making requests as a "softener/minimizer," to make the request seem less of an imposition.

Dog: ちょっとすみません。
Chotto suimasen.
a little (apology)
"Excuse me a little."
"Could I bother you a second?" (PL2)

Oni: なんだよ?
Nan da yo?
what is (emph.) "What?" (PL2)

- chotto su(m)imasen does not mean one is "a little bit sorry"; sumimasen apologizes for imposing, and chotto once again is intended to "soften/minimize" the imposition — something like saying "a second" even though it may take much longer than that.
- nan da yo is a rough, masculine way of asking "what?"

Dog: そのトラのパンツのことですけど...
Sono tora no pantsu no koto desu kedo... that/those tiger/tigerskin of pants about is but "It's about that tigerskin outfit, but..." (PL3)

Oni: カッコいい?
Kakko ii?
appearance good
"Doesn't it look great?" (PL2)

- ... no koto is literally "things of/about..." or simply "about."
- kakkō (often shortened to kakko in colloquial speech) refers to external appearance. Kakkō ii = "looks good/cool/dashing," but it's a question here, so it becomes "Doesn't it look great?"
- oni, Japanese "demons/ogres," are commonly depicted wearing this kind of tigerskin suit, which is referred to as tora no pantsu ("tigerskin pants"), even though pantsu in Japanese usually means "underwear," not "trousers."

Dog: ワシントン条約にはふれていないんでしょうか?
Washinton Jōyaku ni wa furete-inai n deshō ka?
Washington treaty to as-for not in violation (expl.) perhaps (?)
"doesn't it violate the Washington Treaty?" (PL3)

Oni: なに、それ?
Nani, sore?
what that
"What's that?" (PL2)

- furete-inai is the negative of furete-iru ("be in violation of"), from fureru ("violate"). Asking with the conjectural deshō ka "softens" his question and makes it feel more polite/less of a direct challenge.
- Washinton Jōyaku is the name used in Japan to refer to the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora, originally established in 1973. Japan joined the convention in 1980.

お盆

by 佐藤竹衛門 / Satō Take'emon

Title: お盆
O-bon
Obon

- refer to the Furiten-kun manga on page 51 for a basic explanation of the Obon festival. During Obon, vegetables with toothpick legs can be placed on the shōryō-dana to represent animals provided as transportation for the visiting ancestors' spirits. The cucumber represents a horse and the small eggplant represents an ox.

2 Sound FX: カタ カタ カタ
Kata kata kata

3 Dog: 押し出せっ!

"Push him out!" (PL2)

Sound FX: トントン

(sound of knocking/banging on table to jostle the gameboard)

Cat: 行けーっ、ナス花田!
Ike, Nasuhanada!
go eggplant-(name)
"Go-o-o, Nasuhanada!" (PL2)

Sound FX: ドンドン
Don don
(sound of heavier knocking/banging on table)

- oshidase is the abrupt command form of oshidasu ("push out"). The small tsu at the end implies he says it sharply, like an exclamation. Oshidashi, from the verb oshidasu, is one of the basic sumo techniques.
- ike is the abrupt command form of iku ("go"); with the last vowel elongated, it's often used as a cheer in athletic contests.
- nasu = "eggplant," and Nasuhanada is a name intended to echo Wakahanada and Takahanada, the names used by current sumo stars Wakanohana and Takanohana when they were rising spectacularly through the ranks.
- these two are playing a game based on sumo, in which the participants tap or pound on the gameboard to shake it until one of the "contestants" goes out of the ring or topples over. Usually paper figures are used as rikishi ("wrestlers"), but here they are using the ancestors' symbolic transportation. This is something like playing tiddly-winks with communion wafers.

4 Arrow: 「ロデオ 大会 じゃないっ」
"Rodeo taikai ja nai!"
rodeo meet is not と 怒っている 先祖 の 霊
to okotte-iru senzo no rei
(quote) is angry/fuming ancestor 's spirit
An ancestral spirit fuming, "This isn't a rodeo!"

- taikai is literally "great meeting," and can refer to any event that draws a large crowd, including conferences, conventions, contests and shows of various kinds, fireworks displays, etc.
- ja nai is a colloquial contraction of de wa nai, meaning "is not." The small tsu at the end again indicates nai is spoken sharply — this time in anger rather than as an exclamation.
- quotative to can be thought of as marking the preceding words/description/account as the specific "content/nature" of the next mentioned item/action/situation/etc.
- okatte-iru ("is angry") is from okaru ("become angry/get mad").
- "Rodeo taikai ja nai" to okatte-iru is a complete thought/sentence ("[he] is fuming that this is not a rodeo") modifying senzo no rei ("ancestor's spirit").

ガルシア君

Garcia-kun

by 竹内章 / Takeuchi Akira

Garcia-kun depicts the life of a Columbian laborer who has come to Japan to earn money for his family back home. Foreign laborers such as Garcia-kun are typically given the jobs least desired by the Japanese (often called 3-K [san-kē] jobs: "kitanai, kitsui and kiken," equivalent to 3-D jobs ["dirty, difficult and dangerous"] in the US) and are often exploited as a source of cheap labor. Such work, and the fact that the Japanese tend to view foreign laborers with a measure of prejudice and mistrust, makes their lives in Japan a difficult challenge. But Garcia-kun, a virtuous, honest and hard-working chap, faces the challenges with grace and humor. His character and the manga in which he stars have won the hearts of many Japanese.

Interestingly enough, the author, Takeuchi Akira, denies any attempt to provide social commentary or raise Japanese consciousness about racism. In fact, he has never traveled outside of Japan and has no contact with foreign laborers in the area where he lives (Akita Prefecture in northern Japan). He insists his goal is merely to create humorous manga, because, as he says, "if it's not funny, it's not good manga." (Our interview with Takeuchi can be found in Mangajin #29.)

CDs, Records, Musical Instruments

Garcia: あの、仕事 探してます。
Ano, shigoto sagashite-masu.
 (interj.) work am seeking
"Excuse me. I'm looking for work." (PL3)

- ano is a shortened anō, which is a hesitation word similar to "uhh/um." It's often used to get someone's attention, essentially like "Excuse me."
- sagashite-masu is a contraction of sagashite-imasu, the PL3 form of sagashite-iru ("am/is/are seeking"), from sagasu ("seek/search/look for").

2

Owner: いい よ、保証人 いれば。

 good/fine (emph.) guarantor if exists
"Sure (I'll hire you), if you have a guarantor." (PL2)

Garcia: え？
E?
 huh?/what?
"Really?" (PL3)

- ii basically means "good/fine/okay," but its idiomatic meaning depends largely on context. In response to a request, ii yo expresses consent, "yes/sure," while in response to an offer it means "that's okay/never mind." See Basic Japanese 12.
- hoshōnin is written with kanji meaning "guarantee" and "person" → "guarantor."
- ireba is a conditional "if" form of iru ("exist" for people and other animate beings).

3

Garcia: 大家さん、保証人 になって下さい。
Oya-san, hoshōnin natte kudasai.
 landlord/landlady-(hon.) guarantor become please
"Mrs. Landlady, please be my guarantor." (PL3)

- as is typical in Japanese speech, Garcia addresses his landlady by her title rather than by name. In a corporate setting, -san is often left off of the title, even when speaking to superiors, but otherwise omitting -san would sound very abrupt.
- natte is the -te form of naru ("become"), and adding kudasai makes a polite request. The particle ni, to mark hoshōnin as the target/result of the "becoming," has been omitted to represent Garcia's imperfect command of Japanese; though some particles are commonly omitted in casual speech, ni before naru is usually not one of them. The sentence should properly be: hoshōnin ni natte kudasai.

Landlady: いい よ、仕事 勤めたら。
Ii yo, shigoto tsutometara.
 good/fine (emph.) work/employment if go to work
"Sure, if you get a job." (PL2)

Garcia: ん？
N?
 huh?/what?
"Hmm." (PL2)

- tsutometara is a conditional "if/when" form of tsutomeru, which means "work for/at" or "be employed by," so shigoto tsutometara is literally like "if you become employed by work" → "if you get a job."

Woman: 大丈夫 よ、フリガナ ある から。
Daijōbu yo, furigana aru kara.

"Don't worry. (Because) furigana are provided." (PL2)

- yomenai is the plain/abrupt (PL2) negative of yomeru, the potential ("can/be able to") form of yomu ("read"). Adding desu raises it to PL3 — though some consider this improper grammar. The preferred PL3 negative form would be yomemasen.
- daijōbu means "all right/okay" in the sense of "safe and secure/no cause for concern"; it's often used to reassure the listener: "don't worry."
- furigana refers to the hiragana (or sometimes katakana) "reading/gloss" provided alongside kanji to help those who don't know the kanji, or to give alternate readings.

- kanji yomenai is a complete thought/sentence ("[they] can't read kanji") modifying Nihonjin ("Japanese person/people").

Woman: そう 言えば そう ね。
Sō ieba sō ne.

"Now that you mention it, it is, isn't it." (PL2)

- moji ni moji o noseru is a complete thought/sentence ("place a character on a character") modifying shūkan ("custom"). Ga marks this combination as the subject of his statement in frame 3 — which is exactly what the woman asked for clarification of by saying nani ga?
- ieba is a conditional "if" form of iu ("say"), so sō ieba is literally "if you say that..." → "now that you mention it."
- ne by itself can be used for desu ne ("is/are" + the colloquial ne that seeks or expresses agreement) in informal speech, so sō ne = "it is that way, isn't it."

A short desho (or daro) is often used when giving a reminder or admonishing the listener for something he/she has ignored/overlooked: "surely you know/don't you know/have you forgotten/remember that ..."
- gessha (literally, "month" + "thanks" → "monthly gratuity") refers to payments made to a teacher or school for lessons received → "tuition."
- wasurenaide is the -te form of wasurenai, the negative of wasureru ("forget"). The -te form of a verb can make an informal request, but if the verb is negative in such cases it becomes a relatively gentle prohibition, "don't ..."

OL1: それからお風呂の修理。
Sorekara o-furo no shiri.
 after that/also (hon.)-bath of repair
"Also, repairing the bath." (PL2)

OL1: 今日中に大家さんに頼みに行くこと。
Kyō-jū ni ōya-san ni tanomi ni iku koto.
 within today landlord-(hon.) to request (purpose) go thing
"Go request it of the landlord within today." (PL2)

- sorekara is literally "from/after that," but often is used idiomatically to mean "also/in addition/next."
- -jū ni after a word that denotes a period of time implies "within/by the end of (that period)," so kyō-jū ni means "before the day is out." She's essentially emphasizing "(do it) today" with the feeling of "don't let it slide until tomorrow."
- tanomi is the stem form of tanomu ("make a request"), and ni after the stem form of a verb means "in order to/for the purpose of," or simply "to/for." Tanomi ni iku = "go to make a request."
- koto (lit. "thing") added to the end of a non-past declarative sentence can make a gentle command/admonition.

3

OL1: それに燃えないゴミ!
Sore ni moenai gomi!
 besides that/also unburnable trash/garbage
"And the unburnable garbage!"
 明日こそは出しなさいよ。
Ashita koso wa dashinasai yo.
 tomorrow (emph.) as-for put out (emph.)
"Put it out tomorrow for sure." (PL2)

- moenai is the negative of moeru ("[something] burns/is combustible"). Moenai modifies gomi: "noncombustible/unburnable garbage." Japanese garbage haulers have long required separation of burnable and unburnable garbage, sending the former to incinerators and the latter to landfills or recycling.
- dashinasai is a relatively gentle command form of the verb dasu ("put out").

OL2: だれに電話してたの?
Dare ni denwa shite-ta no?
 who to telephone was doing (explan.-?)
"Who were you talking to on the phone?" (PL2)

OL1: 自分ちの留守番でんわ。
Jibun chi no rusuban denwa.
 own house 's answering machine
"My answering machine." (PL2)

- denwa = "telephone," and denwa shite-(i)ta is the past form of denwa shite-iru ("is calling/talking on the phone"), from denwa suru ("to telephone").
- jibun chi is a contraction of jibun no uchi, "oneself's home" → "own home."
- rusuban traditionally refers to the task of guarding/watching the house while everyone else is away, so a rusuban denwa is a telephone that takes phone messages while you are away — i.e., an "answering machine."

1

OL1: あ、あの、えーと、
A- ano, e-to,
"Uh, umm, urr,..."

OL1: チョトマッテクダサーイ。
choto matte kudasa-i a little wait please
"Just a moment, please." (PL3)

OL2: 国際電話 だなー。くっくっ
Kokusai denwa da na. Ku! ku!
international phone call is (colloq.) (gleeful laugh)
"Sounds like an international call. Tee hee." (PL2)

- saying choto instead of chotto and the katakana show she's speaking with an accent — here presumably implying she's speaking accented English.
- na at the end of a sentence can make a conjecture/guess like "That must be it." or "I'll bet that's it" — especially when talking to oneself. Here she can be pretty certain from what she hears, so it's closer to "sounds like."

2

OL1: あー、恥ずかしかった。
A- hazukashikatta.
(interj.) was embarrassing
"Oh, that was embarrassing." (PL2)

OL1: 英会話 やり直さなくちゃ。
Eikaiwa yarinaosanakucha.
Eng. conversation must do over
"I need to brush up on English conversation." (PL2)

OL2: がんばって ねー。
Ganbatte nē.
strive/good luck (colloq.)
"Rah rah!" (PL2)

- hazukashikatta is the plain/abrupt past form of hazukashii ("shameful/embarrassing").
- yarinaosanakucha is a contraction of yarinaosanakute wa, an informal "must/have to" form of the verb yarinaosu ("do over/repeat").
- ganbatte is the -te form of ganbaru ("be dogged/persistent/unflinching" in the face of a challenge). The -te form is often used as a cheer in athletic competitions, implying "strive hard/give it your all," and OL2 is essentially cheering OL1 in much the same manner.

Boss: この字 違うぞ。
Kono ji chigau zo.
this character different/wrong (emph.)
"This character is wrong." (PL2)

「実績」じゃなくて 「実績」。
"Jisseki" ja nakute "jisseki."
(wrong kanji) instead of (correct kanji for "results/sales/record")
"It's 実績, not 実績." (PL2)

OL1: あははは、そうかー。 どーも すいませーん。
A ha ha ha, sō ka-. Dōmo suimase-n.
(laugh) that way (?) (emph.) (apology)
"A ha ha ha, oh, yeah." (PL2) "I'm sorry." (PL3)

- ja nakute is the -te form of ja nai ("is not"). X ja nakute Y makes an expression meaning "Y, not X/not X but Y/instead of X, Y."
- sō ka, literally a question ("Is it that way/is that right?"), is also used to express a new realization/understanding: "That's right!/Oh, right!/Oh, yeah!"

4

OL1: 漢字 やり直さなくちゃ。
(imagined) Kanji yarinaosanakucha.
kanji must do over
"I need to brush up on kanji." (PL2)

Boss: なぜか こうは ならないんだ ー。
(thinking) Naze ka kō wa naranai nda nā.
why (?) this way as-for doesn't become (explan.) (colloq.)
"For some reason, this never happens." (PL2)

- naze ka is literally "why is it?"; when at the beginning of a sentence it is similar to: "For some reason..."
- naranai is the negative of naru ("become"); kā naranai = "doesn't become/turn out like this" (inserting wa adds emphasis).

b- but you/dear park at had been discarded/abandoned (explan.) (emph.)

“B- but, Dear, ... they'd been abandoned in the park!” (PL2)

- kaeru is the potential (“can/be able to”) form of kau (“raise livestock/keep a pet”).
- a verb followed by the expression ... wake (wa/ga) nai makes a strong denial that that action could occur.
- desho (shortened from deshō) essentially makes a conjecture, so kaeru wake nai desho is literally “It’s probably not possible to keep (them) as pets.” But when the final vowel is short and spoken sharply, it has more the feeling of an assertion: “You know very well that it’s not ...”
- ii toshi (lit. “good age”) is an idiomatic expression for “old enough to know better”; ii toshi shite = “at an age when you should know better” (shite is the -te form of suru, “do”).
- kangaete-ru is a contraction of kangaete-iru (“is/are thinking”) from kangaeru (“think”).
- mattaku, literally meaning “completely/entirely,” is often used as an exclamation of exasperation. It can occur at either the beginning or end of the sentence.
- nante is a colloquial form often used to belittle the preceding as trifling/unworthy/out of the question.
- shi is an emphatic “and/and moreover/and besides.” In each of the clauses ending in shi, the topic marker wa is used instead of o to mark the direct object of the verb; making the direct object the topic essentially adds emphasis.
- unko is juvenile/baby talk along the lines of “poop/BM/doo-doo” — though it is also used by adults.
- esu refers to “food/feed” given to animals/pets. It’s also used for “bait” when fishing or setting a trap.
- datte is a conjunction often used to introduce defensive statements or statements of protest/objection to what has just been said: “But ...”
- omae is best described as a fairly rough, masculine word for “you,” but between spouses it can be used by either husband or wife with a familiar/endearing tone.
- suterarete-(i)ta is the past form of suterarete-iru, from suterareru (“be thrown away/abandoned”), the passive form of suteru (“throw away/discard/abandon”).
- nda shows he is making an explanation, and zo is a rough, masculine particle for emphasis.

4

Husband: 今 また 捨てたら、 /みんな 死んじゃう んだぞ。

Ima mata sutetara, / minna shinjau nda zo.

now again if discard/abandon all die-(regret) (explan.) (emph.)

“If I abandon them again now, they’ll all die!” (PL2)

- sutetara is a conditional form of suteru (“throw away/abandon”).
- shinjau is a contraction of shinde shimau, the -te form of shinu (“die”) plus shimau (“end/finish/put away”), which after the -te form of another verb implies the action is/will be regrettable/undesirable.

Wife: だめ です!!

Dame desu!

“No!” → “We cannot keep them!” (PL3)

- dame (“no good/useless/vain/unacceptable”) is commonly used as a word of prohibition (“cannot/must not”).

6

Husband: そんな こと いったって...

Sonna koto itatte...

“Even if you say that ...”

“That may be so, but ...” (PL2)

- itatte is a colloquial equivalent of the conditional itte mo, from iu (“say”). Sonna koto itatte is an expression used when protesting what the other person has said/implies/demanded.

Give them here!” (PL3; PL2-3) Husband: あ... A... “Ah...” (PL2) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • kimasu is the PL3 form of kuru (“come”). Kuru after the -te form of a verb is often equivalent to “go do,” so sutete kuru/kimasu = “go discard/throw away.” • yokoshinasai is a command form of yokosu (“give/send to me”). Here -nasai is obviously spoken quite sharply, but typically it makes a relatively gentle command.
8	Husband: そ...そんな こと すると、お前... So...sonna koto suru to, omae... th- that kind of thing if do you/dear “But Dear, if you do that...” (PL2) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • to after a non-past verb can make a conditional “if/when” meaning.
9	Wife: なに よ? Nani yo? what (emph.) “Then what?” (PL2) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • in colloquial speech yo can be used in place of desu (“is”) or desu ka (“is it?”), in this case the latter. As a question, it can sound quite rough — though it depends on the tone of voice.
10	Husband: 化けて 出る ぞ。 Bakete deru zo. change form-and appear (emph.) “They’ll come back to haunt you.” (PL2) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • bakete is the -te form of bakeru (“change form/transform oneself”). Bakete deru, literally “change form and appear,” essentially means “come back as a ghost” or “come back to haunt.” The subject is the abandoned cats. As in this case, where two verbs are linked by a -te form, the first verb can become an adverb for the second, describing the means/manner of the action of the second verb.
11	Wife: バカな 事 言わないで よ! Baka-na koto iwanaide yo! foolish/ridiculous thing don't say-(request) (emph.) “Don’t say a ridiculous thing.” “Don’t be ridiculous!” (PL2) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • baka-na = “idiotic/foolish/ridiculous,” so baka-na koto is literally “foolish/ridiculous thing.” • iwanaide is the -te form of iwana (“not say”), negative of iu (“say”). The -te form is often used to make informal requests in colloquial speech; a negative -te form makes a relatively gentle negative command/prohibition. • in this case yo is just for emphasis.
12	Sound FX: バタン Batan Blam (sound of door slamming shut)
13	Narration: ところが その 夜... Tokoro-ga sono yoru... but/however that night That night, however... <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • tokoro-ga is a conjunction that implies something is contrary to the expectations raised by what precedes it: “but/however/nevertheless/on the contrary.”

14	Sound FX: ザッザッザッ Za! Za! Za! (scraping/scratching sound)
16	Husband: ん N “Hunh?” • n represents a vague/uncertain grunt, in this case made when coming back to consciousness and becoming aware of the scraping/scratching sound.
19	Husband: あっ! A! (interj.) “Oh no!” • a! indicates the speaker has suddenly noticed/recognized something, like “Oh!” — or, when it’s something bad/undesirable, “Oh no!” • a small tsu at the end of a word or sentence implies the last syllable is spoken crisply/sharply, so it in effect serves as an exclamation point.

Feature • Story

hundred years ago, still haunts the area around her grave.

In general, yūrei do not roam arbitrarily, but stick to familiar locales—such as the place marking their untimely death. A late-night sojourner (specifically one traveling between the hours of 2:00 and 3:00 AM, when yūrei are apt to appear) who unwittingly crosses a field where someone once took her own life, or who traverses a bridge spanning a river in which a body was once left to float, may well encounter a yūrei. Rising up from the darkness, yūrei reanimate themselves with the flame of their passion. This makes them partially human again, reinvested with their original mind and something of their former bodies too—scars, blood and all. But unlike a living person, yūrei are utterly concentrated on a single goal. Retribution or clearing their name occupies their entire being, and so they lack the roundedness of a mortal. A yūrei is a purpose.

Many yūrei are female ghosts who suffered badly in life from the vagaries of love, and whose powerful emotions of jealousy, sorrow, regret, or spite at their time of death has brought them to seek revenge on whomever it was who caused their suffering. Male yūrei are less common, and less likely to be seeking revenge; a common type is the warrior who was killed in battle and so has no personal grudge (since to die was part of his profession), but cannot pull himself away from the historical events in which he figured. This type of yūrei figures often in Noh plays, and he is often indistinguishable at first sight from a real person. He hangs around ancient battlefields or moss-covered temple precincts waiting for a kindly person to come along who will listen to his story of what took place there in the past. A record is set straight, a smeared reputation untarnished, a name cleared. Such ghosts let out the secrets of history, and are bent only on letting the truth be known. The matters in which they had been involved in life are too long past for the struggles to be rekindled.

An interesting physical aspect of yūrei is that they have no legs, trailing off instead into smoke-like wisps where a person’s legs would normally be. The absence of legs fits with the general non-corporeality of the yūrei, for their whole bodies are wraithlike and lacking in that outer boundary of skin or scale that holds other living things in shape. Legs serve to join creatures to the soil, they root being to the earth, and so to be legless is in a sense to be disengaged. This feature of the Japanese ghost is not dissimilar to the ability of the Western ghost to float slightly above the ground, or slightly beneath it, without using the legs it still theoretically has.

There is another point to be made of the legless ghost: by binding people to the soil, legs stress what part is on top and what is on bottom; they advertise a right way up and a wrong one. To be without legs is to be devoid of this proper standard. Ghosts are likely to come at night, not only because they relish the dark, but because people sleep lying down, their feet on the same level as their heads. At funerals, Japanese corpses were buried seated (although cremation is common today) so that they entered the next life still in the correct posture, mind firmly at the top. Ghosts are apt to invert.

This would all seem quite far off to contemporary Japanese. They may know the stories, but they surely don’t believe in them. Or do they? Such myths tend to run deep. And is it not intriguing that in this very year, Toriyama’s books were reissued again after a lapse of over two centuries? A deluxe edition appeared this spring, just in time for a long and abnormally torrid summer.

Epilogue: Naniwa Kin'yūdō

This is the final installment of Naniwa Kin'yūdō to be featured in Mangajin but we felt it was our duty to at least let our readers know the ultimate fate of Takahashi and his family.

Soon after Takahashi borrows ¥3 million from Empire Finance (with his daughter Masako as a co-signer), his company goes bankrupt with ¥2.5 million of the loan unpaid. Moreover, he is ¥5 million in debt to another loan company, Kiritori Finance, and owes ¥800,000 in unpaid salaries to former employees. The entire Takahashi family is forced to flee and hide out in a shabby apartment which Masako is able to rent only after borrowing ¥50,000 from two additional finance companies.

Since Empire Finance has Masako as a guarantor, it has no trouble finding her family's new address. While tracking her down, Haibara and his colleague Kuwata meet the money collectors from Kiritori Finance, who have no guarantor or other means for recovering their ¥5 million. Kiritori Finance agrees to split the money with Empire Finance if Empire can collect it through Masako.

Masako cooperates out of fear of what the money collectors from Kiritori will do if Empire gives them her family's address. Kuwata shows her how to trick other loan companies into giving her the money she needs, and Empire Finance makes its usual hefty profit.

Two months later Masako is again being hounded by money collectors. In an effort to ease his guilty conscience, Haibara helps Masako file for personal bankruptcy, and she is able to escape the burden of her debt. Following this incident, Haibara resolves to do away with sentimentalities and to pursue a career in finance.

Naniwa Kin'yūdō is still being serialized in Kodansha's Weekly Comic Morning. Volumes 1-5 of the series are available from Mangajin's catalog, located in the back of this issue (US edition).

We have labeled this PL2 (its PL3 form is de arimasu), but since it isn’t used colloquially you could say it doesn’t really fit into our usual PL scheme. No de aru is the same as no da/desu, indicating an explanation is being offered, so aru no de aru can be thought of literally as “the situation is that (something) exists.” In this case, though, the explanatory form is being used mostly for emphasis: “(something) really does exist.” moshi is almost always followed by one of the conditional forms (“if”) — in this case itara (“if [someone] exists/if there is [someone]”), from iru, the word for “exist(s)” that’s used with people and other animate things. umeyō to shite-iru is the progressive (“is/are –ing”) form of umeyō to suru, where umeyō comes from umeru (“bury”). A verb ending in -ō/-yō to suru gives the meaning “make an effort/try to (do the action).” unko shita ato suna o kakete umeyō to shite-iru is a complete thought/sentence (“after pooping, [he/she] is trying to bury [the poop] by covering [it] with sand”) modifying hito (“person”). toritsukarete-iru is from toritsukareru (“be/become possessed/haunted”), the passive form of the verb toritsuku (“possess/haunt”). No de aru indicates an explanation is being offered; the second part of the sentence explains the situation described in the first part.

The Seventh: Apparition of an Eel

by

杉浦日向子

Sugiura Hinako

Here we present the seventh story in an eerie and beautiful compilation of Edo-style ghost stories entitled One Hundred Tales. The compilation begins with an invitation: an aging retired man who lives alone in a quiet retreat beckons his gardener to come sit with him and tell him a story. The gardener proceeds to tell a ghost story, after which he remarks upon a pleasant smell in the air. The old man explains that he has received one hundred sticks of the finest incense as a gift, and has decided to ease the boredom of his final days with a little game: each visitor to his home will be requested to tell one story, and during each story he will burn one stick of incense, until one hundred stories are told. The gardener's story is the first.

When one stick of incense remains, the old man will hear no more stories; he will light the incense, pray for safe passage to the next world, and pass away, allowing the final stick of incense to comfort him in death, as is the traditional role of incense in Japan. In this way he brings the last of the one hundred stories—his own—to a close.*

About the Author

Sugiura Hinako is a premier example of a young manga artist who has delved into the Edo period (1600-1867) for inspiration. In school she studied visual communication and design, and dreamed of one day becoming an art director for commercials. But at the same time she also became increasingly fascinated by feudal Japan. This led her to become a disciple of Inagaki Shisei, one of Japan's most respected scholars of the Edo period. In 1980, she made her debut in the experimental manga magazine Garō with a short story set in the Edo period, and ever since then she has been a chronicler of life in old Tokyo. Descended from a family of kimono makers in Tokyo, she grew up with a rich sense of tradition, and in her own work she has been more than a historian: she has been a virtual apostle of a revived Edo aesthetic.

The above is excerpted from an article by Frederik Schodt entitled "Sugiura Hinako and the Roots of Japanese Comics," published in Mangajin No. 20.

* During the Edo period, it was a popular pastime for people to gather together, light one hundred candles, and then go around in a circle telling ghost stories, blowing out one candle after the telling of each one. When the last candle was blown out, it was said that a ghost would appear. The stories told at these gatherings were eventually written down in collections entitled Hyaku Monogatari. Sugiura has based her work on this style of storytelling, but the stories in it are hers.

1 Guest:
Iya, kore wa . . .
 "Oh, my, this is . . ."

Host:
Unagi wa o-kirai deshita ka na?
 "Did you perhaps dislike eel?"
 (PL3-4)

- though iya by itself or in the form of iya da/desu can mean "no" or "it's disagreeable," here it is serving as a hesitation/"warm-up" word at the beginning of a longer sentence/thought — something like "well/I mean." The longer sentence (explicit or implied) is not necessarily negative in such examples, but in this case, given the host's response, the guest's tone apparently conveys that something is indeed unpleasant/disagreeable to him.
- kore = "this," and wa is the particle that marks the topic of a sentence. In this case, he chooses not to state explicitly what he thinks about that topic.
- o- is honorific, and kirai (da/desu) = "dislike." Deshita is the past form of desu.
- asking with ka na instead of just ka adds a conjectural feeling to the question: "I wonder if . . . /is it perhaps that . . . ?"

2 Guest:
Iie. Wakai jibun wa tanto.
 "No. When I was young, (I ate) plenty."
 "Not at all. In my younger days, I had my share." (PL2)

Host:
Nanzo gozatta ka?
 "Was there something?"
 "Did something happen?"
 (PL3)

- wakai = "young," and jibun denotes an approximate time frame/period, so wakai jibun = "when I was young/in my youth."
- tanto is a slang word for takusan, "plenty/a lot."
- nanzo is equivalent to nanika = "something/anything."
- gozatta is the plain/abrupt past form of the verb gozaru, which can be equivalent to either iru ("exist[s]/be in a place" for people and other animate things) or aru ("exist[s]/be in a place" for inanimate things) — here the latter. In modern speech, gozaru and gozatta are seldom heard in their plain/abrupt form, usually occurring instead with the more polite -masu/-mashita ending in PL4 speech: gozaimasu/gozaimashita.
- nanzo gozatta ka is nanika arimashita ka in modern Japanese.

3 Guest:
Sate, warui yume to yara . . .
 "Well, would it be called a bad dream . . . ?"
 "Perhaps it was a bad dream . . ." (PL2)

- sate is a versatile conjunction that can have many meanings, but often it can simply be considered a pause/hesitation word as the speaker momentarily considers exactly how he wants to put something: "well/let's see."
- warui = "bad," modifying yume, "dream."
- to is quotative, implying something like "be called/described as," and yara is like a conjectural darō ka/deshō ka ("is it perhaps?/would it be?") → to yara = "would it be called/described as . . . ?"

1 Guest: (narrating)

Mukashi, Tora no Gomon o-hori sarai no ninsoku-kata o hikiuketa koto ga gozarimashite na.

“Many years ago, I once took charge of a group of laborers who were to dredge the moat at (Edo Castle’s) Tiger Gate.” (PL3)

- mukashi = “long ago/(in) the past,” referring historically all the way back to ancient times, or personally to one’s earlier years/youth.
- Tora no Gomon is an honorific way of referring to Tora no Mon (literally “Tiger Gate”), one of 36 gates to Edo Castle during the Tokugawa Era (1600-1868). The Toranomon area of modern-day Tokyo took its name from this gate.
- o- is the honorific prefix, hori = “moat,” and sarai is a noun form of sarau (“clean out [a well]/dredge [a river/canal]”), so o-hori sarai is a noun for “moat dredging.”
- no between two nouns makes the first noun into a modifier for the second.
- ninsoku = “a coolie/laborer/hand,” and the suffix -kata (sometimes read gata but not usually with this meaning) means a person in charge of a particular area in an organization. So ninsoku-kata here means a person in charge of laborers.
- o marks ninsoku-kata as the direct object of the verb hikiuketa, the plain/abrupt past form of hikiukeru (“take on/accept charge”).
- gozarimashite is the original, uncontracted form of gozaimashite, the polite -te form of the verb gozaru, equivalent to aru, so . . . koto ga gozarimashite is the same as . . . koto ga atte, the -te form of . . . koto ga aru. The phrase . . . koto ga aru after a past verb means “have had the experience of (doing the action)/once (did the action).” Using the -te form implies he is going to continue; strictly speaking, his sentence remains incomplete.
- na in the middle of a sentence/ statement is a kind of verbal pause, similar to English “you know/you see/I mean.” Na, like ne, typically expects the listener to agree with/confirm the statement, but in this case it essentially seeks confirmation that the listener is following what the speaker is saying. Use of na instead of ne in cases like this is masculine.

take-along lunch”) is one of these. For these words, the prefix is commonly used by both sexes even when referring to their own things, but male speakers in their teens and older are somewhat more likely to drop it than female speakers and children, and context is often an important factor as well.

1 Guest: (narrating)

Utatane o shite-iru to niwa no hō kara wakai otoko ga haitte kita.

“While I was dozing, a young fellow came in through the garden” (PL2)

- utatane = “a nap/doze”; utatane (o) suru is its verb form, and utatane o shite-iru makes it progressive (“am/is/are -ing”).
- to after a non-past verb can make a conditional “if/when” meaning. Though the Japanese verb is non-past, the English equivalent can be either past or present depending on context.
- niwa = garden and hō = “direction,” so niwa no hō = “the direction of the garden.”
- kara = “from”; . . . no hō kara = “from the direction of” → “through.”
- wakai = “young,” modifying otoko, “man.”
- ga marks wakai otoko as the subject of haitte kita.
- haitte is the -te form of hairu (“come/go in”), and kita is the past form of kuru (“come”). A form of kuru is often added to the -te form of a verb to clarify that the action of the verb moves toward the speaker/subject.

2 Guest: (narrating)

Ninsoku nakama darō to omotta.
“I thought he was probably a member of the group (of supervisors).”

“I thought he was probably one of my fellow supervisors.” (PL2)

- nakama means “member” but implies the member is of the same status. Since the narrator himself is a supervisor, ninsoku nakama in this case is “(one of) the supervisors of the laborers.”
- darō makes a conjecture: “perhaps/probably.”
- to is quotative, marking what precedes it as the content of omotta, the plain/abrupt past form of omou (“think”).

Stranger:

Asu wa iyoiyo o-sarai de gozaimasu ne.

“The dredging finally begins tomorrow, doesn’t it?” (PL4)

- asu = “tomorrow.”
- iyoiyo = “at length/finally.”
- o- is honorific, and sarai is again the noun form of sarau (“clean out [a well]/dredge [a river/moat]”).

- de gozaimasu is most easily thought of as a PL4 equivalent of da/desu (“is/are”). Since gozaimasu is the polite form of the PL4 verb gozaru, which we’ve already noted is the same as aru, de gozaimasu might more strictly be considered equivalent to de aru (“is/are”); but whereas de gozaimasu frequently occurs in polite speech (as da and desu occur at lower levels of politeness), de aru is mostly a literary form.
- ne shows the speaker expects the listener to agree with/confirm what he has said.

1 Guest as Youth:

“Yes. Let’s apply ourselves vigorously to performing the job with dispatch.”

“Yes. Let’s do our best and get the job done quickly.” (PL3)

Sound FX:

Koki!

Crack! (sound of cracking his neck)

Sound FX:

Fuwā! (effect of yawn)

- sayō is an archaic word for “it is that way/that is so” → “yes.” It hasn’t completely disappeared from use today but is relatively rare.
- sei = “vigor/energy,” and sei dashite is the -te form of sei (o) dasu (literally “put out/exert energy”), which means to “work hard at/apply oneself vigorously to” a task. The -te form makes this phrase an adverb for tsutomemashō.
- shubi is written with kanji for “neck/head” and “tail,” and means “beginning and end.” Shubi yoku is the adverb form of shubi yoi or shubi ga ii, literally, “beginning and end is good,” implying that a task is completed “smoothly/efficiently.” Shubi yoku also modifies tsutomemashō.
- tsutomemashō is the PL3 volitional (“let’s/I shall”) form of tsutomeru (“perform/discharge [one’s] duty”).

2 Stranger:

O-hori ni wa, taisō unagi ga sumatte-iru to kiki-oyobimasu.

“I’ve heard tell that a great many eel live in the moat.” (PL3-4)

- taisō = takusan = “many”
- sumatte-iru (“live/are living”) is from sumau, which is a close synonym of sumu (“live/reside [in a place]”). Sumau is archaic, and is rarely used in modern conversation.
- kiki-oyobimasu is the PL3 form of kiki-oyobu (“hear about/learn of”), used when speaking of indirect, hearsay information.

3 Guest as Youth:

Naruhodo, sono yō na uwasa o kikimasu na.

“Indeed, one hears such rumors.” (PL3)

- naruhodo expresses one’s understanding of what has been said: “I see/indeed/really.”
- uwasa = “rumor/talk”; sono yō na uwasa = “rumor(s) like that” → “such rumor(s).”

4 Stranger:

"(All right.) If I come across such a long-time resident of the moat, I shall spare him." (PL2)

Stranger:

Ā, sore o kiku bakari desu.

"Ahh, that is what I wished to hear." (PL3)

- nushi = "lord/master"
- de arō makes a conjecture, like darō or deshō: "perhaps/probably/I suppose it is . . ." De mo arō becomes "I suppose it is . . . or something."
- toshi = "year(s)," and furuku is the adverb form of furui ("old").
- sumu = "live/reside," and sumu mono = "person/animal that resides." O marks this as the direct object of mikaketara.
- mikaketara is a conditional "if/when" form of mikakeru ("happen to see/catch sight of" → "happen to come across").
- tasukemashō is the volitional ("let's/I shall/I think I'll") form of tasukeru ("rescue/help").
- kiku = "hear," and bakari = "only" — implying his only reason for coming was to hear what he has just heard.

"It is (only) barley rice I have on hand, but shovel some in before you go."

"I can offer only some barley rice I happen to have on hand, but please have a bite before you go." (PL2)

- ariawase implies putting together/making use of whatever happens to be on hand.
- nugimeshi is rice cooked together with barley → "barley rice."
- ga = "but"
- kakkonde is a contraction of kakikonde, the -te form of kakikomu ("shovel in").
- ikinasure is an archaic equivalent of ikinasai, a relatively gentle command form of iku ("go"). Iku after the -te form of another verb is literally "(do the action) and go" → "do the action before you go."

有合せの

- measurement called shaku is almost exactly equal to an American "foot."
- ori is a continuing form of oru, humble equivalent of iru ("exist" for animate things): "... exists, and ..." → "there is . . . , and . . ."
- kanarazu = "certainly/definitely," and arawaremasu is the PL3 form of arawareru ("appear/show up").
- nanitozo by itself can be equivalent to "please," but, like dōzo, when it's combined with the polite request form, -te kudasai ("please [do the action]"), it serves just as emphasis. It is a somewhat old-fashioned and formal expression.
- korosazu ni is a classical Japanese equivalent of korosanaide, the negative -te form of korosu ("kill"). A verb in the -zu ni or -naide form followed by another verb implies "do the second action without/instead of doing the first action."

1 Guest: (narrating)

Yokujitsu, sarai-ba e itari, sakuya no koto o omoidashite yobawatta.

"The next day, I went to the dredging site, and, remembering the evening before, I called out:" (PL2)

- yokujitsu = "next day."
- sarai = "dredging," and -ba is a suffix meaning "place," so sarai-ba = "dredging site."
- e marks the destination of a movement.
- itari is a continuing form of itaru ("reach/arrive at").
- sakuya = "yesterday evening/last night."
- no koto = "about."
- omoidashite is the -te form of omoidasu ("recall/remember," from omou ["think"] + dasu ["take out/bring out"]). Using the -te form here makes sakuya no koto o omoidashite into a modifier for yobawatta.
- yobawatta is an archaic expression that is the plain/abrupt past form of yobawaru ("shout/call out loudly").

2 Guest as Youth:

Dare zo ō-unagi o hori ya shinai ka?

"Has anyone perchance dug up a great eel?" (PL2)

Zehi morai-uketai.

"I'd very much like to receive it."

"I want you to turn it over to me." (PL2)

- dare zo is an archaic expression that is equivalent to dareka ("somebody/anybody"). Cf. nanzo = nanika, above (page 75).
- hori ya shinai is from horu ("dig/dig up"). It can be considered a slang equivalent of horanai, the negative form of horu, so hori ya shinai ka = horanai ka = "did you not dig?/have you not dug?"
- zehi = "very much/by all means."
- morai-uketai is the "want to" form of morai-ukeru, which combines the stem form of morau ("receive") and ukeru ("receive/accept"). He's essentially saying he wants them to turn the great eel over to him.

3 Dredge-hand:

Ōsa, susamajii no o hotta wai.

"You bet! We dug up a real whopper." (PL2)

- ōsa is an archaic expression that is an interjection confirming/agreeing with what the other person has said.

呼ばわった。

誰ぞ大鯉を 掘りやしないか。
是非貰い請け

オウサ 凄まじいのを
掘ったわい。

It's more emphatic than just ō, which is a colloquial, masculine "yes/sure/right."

- susamajii has a wide range of meanings, "terrible/dreadful/terrific/powerful/wonderful/amazing/absurd," depending on what it's modifying.
- no can be used as a pronoun in place of a common noun, like "one" is often used in English; here, no stands for unagi ("eel"). Susamajii no = "an amazing one" → "a real whopper."
- hotta is the plain/abrupt past form of horu ("dig/dig up").
- wai is a masculine form of the feminine wa, and is typically used for exclamatory emphasis.

- 1 Guest: (narrating)
Kaketsukete mireba, haya uchi-koroshita ato de atta.
 "When I dashed up, it was already after they had killed it."
 "When I rushed to the spot, I discovered, alas, that they had already killed the eel." (PL2)

- kaketsukete is the -te form of kaketsukeru ("run/dash/rush up to [something/someplace]").
- mireba is a conditional "if/when" form of miru ("look/see"), which here makes the entire clause kaketsukete mireba conditional.
- haya = "already/so quickly."
- uchi- is an intensifying prefix, and koroshita is the plain/abrupt past form of korosu ("kill").
- ato = "after"; when it follows the past form of a verb, it means "after (that action took/takes place)": uchi-koroshita ato = "after (they) killed it."
- de atta is the plain/abrupt past form of de aru, a more formal/"literary" equivalent of dawdesu ("is/are").

- 2 Guest: (narrating)
Sakareta hara kara wa mugimeshi ga gossori to dete kita.
 "As for from his split-open belly, barley rice came out in large quantities."
 "Out of his split belly came a whole pile of barley rice." (PL2)

- sakareta is the plain/abrupt past form of sakareru, the passive form of saku ("cut up/cleave/split open").
- hara = "abdomen/belly."
- gossori is a slang word for "a lot/large quantity"; to makes it an adverb for dete kita.
- dete is the -te form of deru ("go/come out"), and kita is the plain/abrupt past form of kuru ("come").

ナニワ 金融道

青木雄二

Naniwa Kin'yūdō

by Aoki Yūji
Part 7

The series:

Naniwa Kin'yūdō first appeared in Kodansha's Weekly Comic Morning (週刊コミックモーニング) in 1990. It was an immediate hit and has run continuously ever since. The appeal of this series seems to be a combination of the subject matter (the unethical dealings of an Osaka loan/finance company), the gritty Osaka dialect used by most of the characters, and the rough but oddly detailed style of drawing.

The title:

Naniwa (written here in katakana ナニワ, but sometimes written with the kanji 浪花 or 浪速) is an old name for the Osaka area, where this series is set. Kin'yū (金融) means "money/finance," and the ending dō (道) written with the kanji for "road/path," can be thought of as meaning "the way of . . ." Given the content of the stories, the title could be rendered as "The Way of the Osaka Loan Shark."

The story so far:

Our hero, Haibara Tatsuyuki, is a new hire at a somewhat shady loan company called Empire Finance, Inc. He is put to work cold-calling Osaka-area construction companies in an effort to lure them into high-interest loans.

Most of the people who answer his calls are hostile and rude, but then Haibara gets lucky. The owner of Takataka Construction, Takahashi Kunimasa, inquires about interest rates.

Haibara passes the phone to his skilful supervisor, Kuwata, who learns that Takahashi needs a loan of ¥3 million by the next afternoon. Kuwata cleverly explains the interest in a way that sounds quite reasonable but actually works out to the exorbitant rate of 42% a year. Takahashi raises no objections to the terms, so Kuwata fills out a loan application over the phone, discovering that Takahashi has a homemaker wife and a daughter, Masako, who works at the ward office. It turns out that he is deeply in debt, so the next morning Kuwata demands that Masako be used as a co-signer. The desperate man is forced to agree.

On their way to give the money to Takahashi, Kuwata explains his philosophy to Haibara: "Japan is a country where you can do anything you want so long as you don't get caught." The two stop for a pricey lunch, and on the way out Kuwata pays by using a ¥10,000 bill from Takahashi's loan money. "Is it really all right—doing a thing like that?" asks the surprised Haibara. "Anything goes so long as you don't get caught, right?" replies Kuwata. They go on to meet Takahashi.

1	Takahashi: アッ、しまった。住所 まちがえた。 A!, shimatta. Jūsho machigaeta. (interj.) shoot/darn address made a mistake “Oh, shoot. I made a mistake in my address.” (PL2) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • shimatta is an exclamation of regret/chagrin: “Oh no!/Shoot!/Darn!” • machigaeta is the plain/abrupt past form of machigaeru (“err/make a mistake”). The particle o, to mark jūsho (“address”) as the direct object of machigaeta, has been omitted, as it often is in colloquial speech.
2	Takahashi: すんまへん。用紙 もう 1枚 お願いします。 Sunmahen. Yōshi mō ichimai onegai shimasu. (apology) form more 1 (count) (hon.)-request do “I’m sorry. Could I please have another copy of the form?” (PL3) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • sunmahen is dialect for sumimasen, which can mean either “sorry/excuse me” or “thank you” depending on the context. • yōshi is a generic term for “pre-printed forms” of all kinds. • mō before a number or quantity means “(that many/that much) more.” -Mai is the counter suffix for flat things, including sheets of paper. Mō ichimai = “1 more sheet” → “another copy.” • onegai means “request” and adding suru/shimasu turns it into a verb, “make a request/ask a favor.” Unless another subject is specified, it is understood to be the speaker who is making the request, so the expression essentially serves as a polite and formal “please.” The o- is actually an honorific prefix, but it’s always used when making a request, even when speaking informally.
3	Kuwata: 社長、おちついて、ゆっくり書きなはれ や! Shachō, ochitsuite, yukkuri kakinahare ya! co. president calm/composed-and slowly write (colloq.) “Mr. Takahashi, calm yourself and write slowly.” “Please relax, Mr. Takahashi, and take your time.” (PL2-K) Takahashi: えらい すんまへん。 Erai sunmahen. very much/terribly (apology) “I’m terribly sorry.” (PL3-K) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • shachō literally means “company head/president.” It is standard for Japanese workers to address their corporate superiors by title rather than by name, including those from other companies. • ochitsuite is the -te form of ochitsuku (“settle/relax/become calm”); the -te form here can be thought of either as making the word an adverb (“calmly”) for kakinahare, or as a separate verb (“calm down/calm yourself”). • kakinahare is dialect that comes from kakinasare, a polite/honorific command form of kaku (“write”). -Nasare is the plain/abrupt command form of the PL4 verb ending -nasaru. In spite of its honorific origins, the politeness level of -nahare is essentially the same as -nasai, the “standard Japanese” PL2-3 command form that derives from the same root. • ya is used at the end of commands/suggestion/requests to emphasize the speaker’s desire that the action be done. • erai basically means “admirable/worthy of praise/respect,” but here the word is being used as an emphasizing adverb, to modify sunmahen (“I’m sorry”) → “I’m terribly sorry.”
4	Takahashi: これで よろしい でっか? Kore de yoroshii dekkā? this with good/fine/okay is it? “Are these satisfactory?” (PL3-informal-K) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • yoroshii is a PL3-4 equivalent of ii/yoi (“good/fine/okay”). • dekkā is a dialect contraction of desu ka (“is it?”).
5	Kuwata: 社長、捨て印 を 押してもらわんと。 Shachō, sute-in o oshite morawan to. co. pres. extra seal (obj.) must have you push/affix “Sir, we need you to affix your seal an extra time” (PL2) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • sute-in refers to an extra impression (or several) of one’s seal affixed to a document in anticipation of a future contingency. • oshite is the -te form of osu (“push,” or in the case of a seal, “affix”). Morawan is a contraction of morawanai, the negative form of morau (“receive”), which after the -te form of another verb implies that the speaker/subject “receives” the action, or has the action done for him/her: oshite morau = “have (you/someone) affix (for me/us).” To after a non-past verb makes a conditional “if/when” meaning, so oshite morawan to is literally “if we don’t have you affix,” but a following ikenai is understood in this case, making it instead a “must/have to” form: oshite morawan(ai) to ikenai = “we must have you affix.”
6	Takahashi: ここ ですね。 Koko desu ne. here/this place is right? “This is the spot, right?” (PL3) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • ne is like a tag question (“isn’t it?/right?”) that assumes an affirmative answer.

7	Takahashi: ホナ、 300万 お願いします。 Hona, sanbyakuman onegai shimasu. in that case/then 3 million (hon.)-request do. “Well then, the 3 million, please.” (PL3) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • hona is an extreme contraction/corruption of sore nara (“if it is so/in that case”): sore nara → sonnara → honnara → honara → hona. It’s not exclusive to, but more common in, Kansai dialect. • since man designates units of “ten-thousand,” 300-man = 300,0000 → 3,000,000.
8	Kuwata: 社長、 領収書 切ってもらわんと。 Shachō, ryōshūsho kitte morawan to. co. pres. receipt must have you cut/draw up “Sir, we (first) need you to draw up a receipt.” (PL2) Sound FX: サッ Sa! (effect of a very quick action — of pulling the stack of money away) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • kitte is the -te form of kiru (“cut”), and morawan to is the same pattern as with oshite morawan to, above.
9	Takahashi: 領収書。 アッ、 そや そや。 Ryōshūsho. A!, so ya so ya. receipt (interj.) yes/right yes/right “Receipt? Oh, right, right.” (PL2-K) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • so ya is dialect for sō da, “that way” + “is/are” → “it is that way” → “that’s right/yes.”
10	Sound FX: カリ カリ Kari kari (scratching sound of pen tip as he writes)
11	Sound FX: サッ Sa! (effect of a very quick action — here of proffering the receipt)
12	Kuwata: ハイ、これで けっこう。 Hai, kore de kekkō. yes/okay this with good/fine/excellent “Yes, this’ll be fine.” (PL2) On Receipt: 領収証 / (株) 帝国金融様 / 金 参百萬圓 也 Ryōshūshō / (Kabu) Teikoku Kin'yū-sama / Kin sanbyakuman-en nari receipt joint stock co. The old kanji for yen (圓) is often used as well, and the amount is preceded by the kanji 金 (kin), and followed with 也 (nari, the archaic equivalent of da/desu). • kensetsu = “construction.”
13	Takahashi: ホナ、 300万 お願いします。 Hona, sanbyakuman onegai shimasu. in that case/then 3 million (hon.)-request do. “Well then, the 3 million, please.” (PL3)

14	Kuwata: じゃー、社長、どうぞ 改めてください。 Jā, shachō, dōzo aratamete kudasai. then/in that case co. pres. (emph.) check/examine please “Well then, sir, please verify the amount.” (PL3) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • jā is a contraction of the conjunction dewa, “in that case/then/well.” • when combined with the polite request form, -te kudasai (“please [do the action]”), dōzo essentially serves as emphasis. • aratamete is the -te form of aratameru, a somewhat formal word for “examine/check/confirm.”
15	Takahashi: どうも、おおきに。助かりました。 Dōmo, ōkini. Tasukarimashita. (emph.) thank you have been helped/saved “Thank you very much. I’ve been helped.” “Thank you very much. You’ve been a tremendous help.” (PL3-K) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • dōmo is an intensifier used with expressions of apology/thanks/greetings/etc., and it can also be used by itself as a shorthand for those same expressions. • ōkini is typically used for “thank you” in Kansai. This word, like dōmo, is only an intensifier that literally means “greatly/very much,” and its use for “thank you” is actually an abbreviation of ōkini arigatō (“thank you very much”). In this particular case, it’s also possible to read ōkini as an intensifier for tasukarimashita, the PL3 past form of tasukaru (“be helped/saved”): ōkini tasukarimashita = “I’ve been helped greatly.” Whichever way you take ōkini, he is expressing his deep gratitude to Kuwata for helping him out of a tight spot.
16	Takahashi: 帝国はん、すんまへん。ワシ 急いどります よってに、出かけます から。 Teikoku-han, sunmahen. Washi isoidorimasu yotte ni, dekakemasu kara. (co. name-hon.) (apology) I/me am in a hurry/rush because/so will go out because/so “I’m sorry, gentlemen, but I’m in a terrible hurry, so I have to be going right away.” (PL3-K) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • -han is dialect for -san. In this case he’s using their company name plus -san in order to address them directly. If he were addressing a single person, an English speaker would probably use either the listener’s name or “sir,” but since he’s addressing two men, “gentlemen” works better here. • washi is a word for “I/me” used mostly by middle-aged and older men. • isoidorimasu is a contraction of isoide-orimasu, PL3 form of isoide-oru (“am/be in a hurry”) from isogu (“hurry/rush”). Kansai speakers typically use -oru for the -iru forms of verbs. • yotte ni is Kansai dialect for kara (“because/so”) or da kara (“because it is . . .” or “it is . . . , so . . .”). • dekakemasu is the PL3 form of dekakeru (“go out”).
17	Daughter: だいじょうぶ、私 が 聞いておく から、早く。 Daijōbu, watashi ga kuite oku kara, hayaku. all right/safe I/me (subj.) will listen/hear-(for future ref.) because/so quickly “Don’t worry, I’ll listen for future reference, so hurry.” “Don’t worry, I’ll make a note of anything else they have to say, so hurry.” (PL2) Takahashi: ホナ、頼んだ で。 Hona, tanonda de. then/in that case asked favor (emph.) “Well then, I’ll leave the rest to you.” (PL2) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • daijōbu means “all right/okay” in the sense of “safe and secure/no cause for concern”; it’s often used to reassure the listener: “don’t worry.” • kuite is the -te form of kiku (“listen/hear”), and oku after the -te form implies the action will be done in preparation for some future event/need. She’s essentially saying she will find out whatever else they need to know about the handling of the loan hereafter. • hayaku is the adverb form of hayai (“fast/quick”); the adverb form is often used as a command: “hurry!” • tanonda is the plain/abrupt past form of tanomu, which means “ask/request (a favor),” and de is a dialect equivalent of the emphatic yo or ze. Tanonda yo/ze/de addressed directly to a person essentially means “I’ve entrusted (it) to you, and I’m counting on you.”
18	Sound FX: バタン Batan Blam (sound of door closing with some force; patan is used for doors closing more quietly)

19	Kuwata: どや? 見つからなんだ やろ? Do ya? Mitsukarananda yaro? what/how is not found out right? “How about it? We didn’t get caught, did we?” (PL2-K)	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • do ya is dialect for dō da, “how is it?” — in this case meaning “what do you think?/how about it?” • mitsukarananda is a dialect contraction of mitsukaranakatta, the past form of mitsukaranai (“not be found/not be found out”), from mitsukaru (“be found/found out”). • yaro is Kansai dialect for the conjectural darō (or darō), here serving as a tag question, “right?/isn’t it so?”
20	Haibara: 電話 してくる ん じゃないですか? Denwa shite kuru n ja nai desu ka? telephone do-come (explan.) is it not? “Isn’t it that they’ll phone us?” “Don’t you think they’ll call us (to complain)?” (PL3)	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • denwa = “telephone,” and denwa suru is its verb form. Shite kuru is the -te form of suru (“do”) + kuru (“come”). Kuru after another verb can indicate that the direction of the action is “toward” the speaker — i.e., “(they’ll) call us.”
21	Kuwata: 領収書 もらっと んや で、 こっち は。 Ryōshūsho moratto n ya de, kocchi wa. receipt have received (explan.) (emph.) this side/direction as-for “We got a receipt, you know.” (PL2-K)	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • moratto n ya is a contraction of moratte-oru no ya, dialect equivalent of moratte-iru no da (“have received” + explan.), from morau (“receive”). • the dialect emphatic particle de, like standard Japanese yo, often emphasizes something the listener needs to be reminded of: “. . . , remember! . . . , you know.” • kocchi is a colloquial kochira (“this way/direction/side”), which is used to mean “we/our side.” In normal syntax, katchi wa would come at the beginning.
22	Haibara: そう か。 (thinking) Sō ka. that way (?) “That’s right.” (PL2)
23	Kuwata: 最高裁 の 判事 でも ワシ が 正しい と 言う で。 Saikōsai no hanji demo washi ga tadashii to iu de. supreme court of judge/justice even if it is I/me (subj.) correct/right (quote) will say (emph.) “Even a justice of the supreme court will say I’m right.” (PL2) Kuwata: 見つからなんだら すべて が 許される んや。 Mitsukaranandara subete ga yurusareru n ya. if not found out/caught all/everything (subj.) is permitted (explan.) “Anything is permitted so long as you don’t get caught.” (PL2)	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • mitsukaranandara is a dialect contraction of mitsukaranakattara, a past conditional “if/when” form of mitsukaranai. • yurusareru is the passive form of yurusu (“permit/approve”).
24	Haibara: 今 ごろ 銀行 で 1万円 足らん と 言われてる の と 違います か? Ima goro ginkō de ichiman-en taran to iwarete-ru no to chigaimasu ka? now about bank at ¥10,000 insufficient (quote) being told (explan.) (quote) different (?) “About now at the bank, is it different from his being told he’s ¥10,000 short?” “He’s probably being told right about now at the bank that he’s ¥10,000 short.” (PL3)	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • taran is a contraction of tarinai (“insufficient”). • iwarete-(i)ru (“is being told”) is from iwareru (“be told”), passive form of iu (“say”). • . . . no to chigaimasu ka is a PL3 version of . . . no to chigau ka, literally meaning, “is it the case that it’s different from . . .”; Kansai speakers very commonly use this as an equivalent to . . . ja nai ka! . . . ja nai desu ka? (“isn’t it the case that . . .”) — though its use is not entirely exclusive to Kansai speech.
25	Kuwata: 1万円 ぐらい やったら だいじょうぶ。腕時計 質屋 へ たたき込んだら 都合がつく。 Ichiman-en gurai yattara daijōbu. Udedokei shichiya e tatakikondara tsugō ga tsuku. ¥10,000 about if it is all right/safe wrist watch pawn shop to if drive/throw into can accommodate/cover “If it’s only ¥10,000, it’s nothing to worry about. If he takes his watch to a pawn shop he can cover it.” “Since we’re talking a measley ¥10,000 here, you needn’t worry. He can make up the difference just by pawning his watch.” (PL2)	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • gurai (or kurai; “about/approximately”) is often used idiomatically to downplay/minimize what it follows, so ichiman-en gurai here means “only ¥10,000/a mere ¥10,000.” • yattara is Kansai dialect for dattara, a conditional “if” form of da (“is/are”). • ude = “arm” and -dokei is from tokei (“clock”; t changes to d for euphony), so udedokei = “wrist watch.” O, to mark this as the direct object of tatakikondara, has been omitted. • shichiya = “pawn shop,” and tatakikondara is a conditional “if” form of tatakikomu (“drive/throw into”). Shichiya ni tatakikomu is a somewhat dramatic sounding expression meaning “to pawn”; shichi-ya ni ireru (literally “put [it] into a pawn shop”), or just shichi ni ireru (“put it into pawn”), are more ordinary expressions with the same meaning. • tsugō ga tsuku is an expression for “need can be met/convenience can be obtained/accommodation can be made.”
26	Kuwata: 金 は 正直 者 に 貸す もん や で!! Kane wa shōjiki-mono ni kasu mon ya de!! money as-for honest person to lend thing is (emph.) “As for money, it’s something to lend to an honest person.” “Lend money only to an honest person!!” (PL2)	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • shōjiki = “honesty/uprightness,” and shōjiki-mono = “honest/upright person.” • mon ya is dialect for mon(o) da, often used at the end of sentences stating a general principle of what one “should always do” or “the only thing one should do.”

Japanese Manga

Naniwa Kin'yūdō

by Aoki Yuji. Given the content of the stories, the title of this series could be rendered as "The Way of the Osaka Loan Shark." Since its appearance in 1990, Naniwa has been a hit, largely due to its subject matter (the unethical dealings of an Osaka loan company), the gritty Osaka dialect used by many characters, and the rough but oddly detailed style of drawing. Adult situations, may not be suitable for all audiences. Five volume set in the original Japanese, no translations or notes. $40.00, subscriber price $35.00

Kachō Shima Kōsaku

by Hirokane Kenshi. Japan's most famous salaryman is a single, fortyish middle-manager working at a giant consumer electronics company, where he battles for truth, profits and the Japanese Way. Mangajin readers will recognize a similarity to Ningen Kōsaten, also drawn by Hirokane. Still Life and Other Stories by Shōno Junzō, translated by Wayne P. Lammers

Delicate tales reveal the flow of life in the modern Japanese family, the accidental pleasures and the unexplained misfortunes. Shono's unique "snapshot" technique—the layering of commonplace events, images and conversations—is like haiku poetry crossed with an Ozu-style film drama. The Journal of Asian Studies called the story "Still Life" an "extraordinary achievement." Shōno Junzō was born in 1921 and lives in Kawasaki. He has received Japan's top literary prizes and is generally considered one of Japan's finest postwar writers. This is the first collection of his work in English. 264 pages, softcover. $13.95, subscriber price $11.95

America and the Four Japans, by Frederik L. Schodt
